

RUSSIAN BIAS WORSENS

NEW YORK (WNS) -- The situation of the Jews in the Soviet Union appeared to worsen, as arrests, house searches and harassments were carried out by police. In one of the worst incidents, Vladimir Slepak was arrested and placed in solitary confinement in a cell 3.3 feet by 1.6 feet for several days, Jewish sources reported.

Slepak was arrested Sept. 19 during a hunger strike to protest the new emigration fees and was imprisoned for approximately two weeks, according to the sources. Earlier Grenville Janner, member of the British Parliament, had charged that Slepak was placed in a room with walls "covered with spikes and nails protruding from the ceiling." Sources here said however, that the Janner information was inaccurate due to mistranslation, and that no spikes or nails protruded from the walls. The Student Struggle for Soviet Jewry reported also that 35 Jewish musicians of the Soviet All Union Radio and Television Orchestra had been fired from their jobs. The SSSJ charged that this action was in reprisal for the emigration to Israel of the orchestra's former conductor, Yury Aronovich. None of the fired musicians have been able to find other jobs, the SSSJ reported. In other arrests, three Soviet Jews were sentenced to 15 days after staging a hunger strike at the Tass office in Kishinev, the Jewish sources reported. The three were protesting the refusal of a Tass employe to sign a document consenting to allow his son to immigrate to Israel. Soviet law requires parental consent, no matter what the age of the emigre. In other news the National Conference on Soviet Jewry reported that the Supreme Court of the Soviet Russian Republic upheld the sentence of Vladimir

Markman, who was given a three-year prison term last August for anti-Soviet activities. Markman was not allowed to present his appeal during the 20-minute court session, according to the NCSJ. SUPPORT YOUR LAS VEGAS ISRAELITE NOW IN ITS 8TH YEAR
