

SLOMOVITZ GETS SMOLAR AWARD

TORONTO (WNS)-- Philip Slomovitz, Editor and publisher of the Jewish News in Detroit, has won the first Smolar Award for Excellence in American-Jewish journalism.

The annual award, named for Boris Smolar, Editor Emeritus of the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, is given by the Council of Jewish Federations for outstanding reportage of Jewish communal affairs and issues in North America. Slomovitz, a vice-president of JTA, is also honorary vice-president of the Zionist Organization of America and the president of its Detroit chapter, president of the Detroit chapter of the American Jewish Congress for the last seven years and member of the AJ Congress national administrative committee for five years.

He was the founder of the American Jewish Press Association and its president for the first ten years.

pollution solution:

It's not an easy or inexpensive thing to come by... a solution for pollution. We began tests this summer on a pilot model of an air pollution control system for our coal-fired Reid Gardner Station in Moapa Valley. Based on the success of those tests, we now are in construction of a full-scale system which will go into operation in 1973, and will effectively reduce emission of particulate matter and sulphur dioxide gases. The price tag? Eight million dollars! A lot of money, sure, but something we must do, because... WE LIVE HERE TOO!
