

US PEACE INTERVENTION UNLIKELY

WASHINGTON (WNS) -- Deputy Israeli premier Yigal Allon said a new American peace initiative in the Middle East was unlikely in the near future although the U. S. would continue to offer its good offices to the parties to reach an agreement.

Allon said, after a two-hour luncheon meeting with Secretary of State William P. Rogers, that Rogers "accepts the view that the (Mideast) situation is so delicate that no premature steps should be taken." He said the situation would no longer be delicate "when both sides ask the U. S. to mediate or when the U. S. invents a new idea."

Allon also said there was a possibility of a separate peace between Israel and Jordan, "at least in theory," but would not confirm press reports he had secret contacts with King Hussein's emissaries in London.

disclosed. The resolution, submitted by a pro-Arab bloc, demands Israel's immediate, unconditional withdrawal from all the occupied Arab territories and recommends sanctions if Israel refuses.

Israel diplomats said the draft runs counter to Security Council Resolution 242 which does not call for an Israeli withdrawal prior to a peace settlement. Israel has made it clear it could not continue to support Resolution 242 if there were any changes in its interpretation. Observers here believe West European nations will attempt to introduce modifications to the resolution making it less extreme.
