NEW YORK (WNS) -- Dr. Shaul Ladany, one of the Israeli athletes to escape the Arab terrorist attack in Munich last September, said Israel's decision to recall the Olympians after the wanton slaying of 11 Israeli athletes was "a victory of emotion over logic, a totally emotional decision."

He said this decision played into the hands of the terrorists by giving them a psychological victory and the realization they were capable of disrupting any event anywhere.

Dr. Ladany, a world champion marathon walker, is the first member of the Israeli Olympic team to visit the United States. He will address meetings in some 20 American cities under the auspices of the Zionist organization of America to explain the horror of Munich, its effect on the Olympic games' future and the psychological repercussions in Israel.

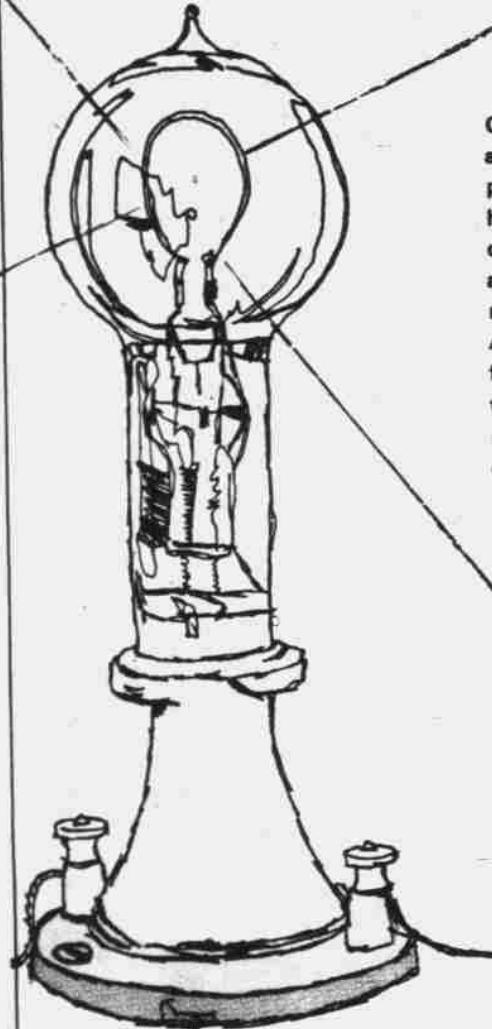

He criticized Germany for its "impotence" in dealing with the terrorists. He said the lives of the Israeli hostages might have been spared if it had opted for approaches other than sheer force; either to offer a large ransom for their release, or to keep the Israeli compound in the Olympic village under seige.
