JEWISH LEADERS FETE BREZHNEV WHILE JEWS DEMONSTRATE OUTSIDE

10,000 DEMONSTRATE IN D.C.

WASHINGTON (WNS) -- More than 10,000 persons, most of them young people, who came by planes, trains, buses and cars from 20 states, gathered in the nation's Capital to remind visiting Soviet Communist Party Secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev that Americans are concerned with the fate of Soviet Jewry. Speakers at the Freedom Assembly for Soviet Jewry demanded free emigration for Jews and other citizens of the Soviet Union and an end to arrests and harrassment of those seeking exit visas. They also urged the U.S. government to see that the USSR complies with the basic tenets of human rights before extending to it the benefits of profitable trade with this country.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D. Washington), who received the warmest and most prolonged ovation at the 2-hour rally, predicted that Congress would pass his amendment to the Soviet Union removing its restrictions on emigration. "We must have a genuine detente between people, not some cynical formula between governments for capitulation on the requirement for human rights," Jackson said.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R. N.Y.), in a message to the Freedom Assembly, also said that justice for Soviet Jewry is "an indispensable condition" for expanded American trade with the Soviet Union. AFL-CIO President George Meany in a message pledged the labor federation's support.

Organizers of the rally stressed that the demonstration was not against Brezhnev or in opposition to the U.S.-Soviet detente, but was intended to show the Russian leader the overwhelming concern of Americans for the situation of Jews seeking to leave the Soviet Union.

WASHINGTON (WNS) -- Some Jewish leaders have been invited to the state dinner President Nixon will give for Soviet Communist Party Secretary Leonid I. Brezhnev at the White House, according to Dr. Henry Kissinger, Nixon's national security advisor.

Meanwhile some 10 - 15,000 persons were expected to attend a "National Freedom Rally" here sponsored by the National Conference for Soviet Jewry. The rally will feature objects symbolizing Soviet oppression of the Jewish faith, the punishment of Jews wishing to emigrate and the bar to free emigration. Later at the Western White House in San Clemente the Southern California Council for Soviet Jewry will organize hold a candlelight march.

Brezhnev will be nowhere near either of the demonstrations. He is also expected to visit New York City or any other large city for security reasons.

Meanwhile it was revealed that the National Conference for Soviet Jewry asked the Southern California group to use "exercise caution" in its demonstrations. Jerry Goodman, executive director of the National Conference, said the plea was motivated by what might happen to Jews in the Soviet Union should any untoward incident be construed as an insult to Brezhnev or harm him politically within Kremlin circles.

In New York, the local branch of the United Nations Association adopted a resolution asking Nixon to intercede strongly with Brezhnev on behalf of the human rights of Soviet citizens and for the freedom of Jews and other groups to leave the country.

In Moscow seven Jewish scientists continued a hunger strike to protest the Soviet Union's refusal to allow them to emigrate to Israel. But other Jewish activists in Moscow have been warned by police not to demonstrate during Brezhnev's visit to Washington. Sources said that if they behaved their applications for emigration to Israel would be seriously considered.

This is Las Vegas

We started writing, as we do each year at this time when tourists commence their summer trek, about the myriad of stellar attractions to be found in Las Vegas.

But there are a few items bugging us, so before we commence with the attractions, let us first get a couple of "detractions" out of the way.

Maybe we're naive. So when a G.L. Vido TV commercial announced 100% off on appliances, we sauntered over to the store to pick up a new frigidaire or a dish washer at the noble price of nothing. Of course, that's what we came away with -- nothing. Appears there was a bit of a misunderstanding about the TV commercial. What was meant was 100% off the reduction, which brought the "reduced cost" to about one and half times what you would have to pay for the same item elsewhere. So much for that.

Then there was a story about Las Vegas being overrun with prostitutes. It was stated about a thousand were operating in one hotel, alone, and the arrests were running up to 30 a day. We don't doubt for one minute our sheriff, or for that matter our district attorney, who was calling for more stringent laws. But in all the years we have been in Las Vegas, we have never been approached. Not once.

So in the interest of honest reporting, we decided to investigate first hand. But we'd first have to change our image. With slicked down hair, flashy tie and sports jacket we set off to case some casino bars.

Generally speaking, the fair sex in Vegas appear to be most attractive from every aspect. There just does not seem to be any ugly women in our town. Whether it is because visitors are at their best appearance in our resort atmosphere, or locals have to keep up to compete, we do not know. But everywhere, in the casinos, at the pools, dining, golfing or on the tennis courts, nothing but dolls in every direction.

Don't get us wrong. There is no inference all are fast women. But the stories said the town was flooded with them and we were determined to find out for ourself.

At the first casino bar we noticed a pretty little damsel in satin and fluffs, wearing open-toed sandals to match her gown sitting four fifths off a stool. We smiled at her. She smiled back, almost expecting, we imagined, for us to ask her: "Will you have a drink, honey,"
