

CONSERVATIVES WANT BETTER EDUCATED AMERICAN JEWS WITH VALUES OF JUDAISM

PALM BEACH,--The head of Conservative Judaism called on the other two branches of the Jewish faith --Orthodox and Reform -- to enter into "a lively competition" with the Conservative Movement aimed at reshaping Jewish education in order to bring American Jewish life more fully under the influence of "authentic Jewish values and teachings."

Dr. Gerson D. Cohen, chancellor of The Jewish Theological Seminary of America in its 88th year, which is the academic and spiritual center of Conservative Judaism and whose head is acknowledged as the leader of the more than 1,000,000 member Conservative Movement, told more than 250 nationally prominent Jewish leaders at the Seminary's 1974 Nat'l fund appeal, that he was personally "driven by the vision of a better educated American Jew deeply committed to the ethical/moral values of Judaism."

"Nothing drives me more than the vision of training Jewish scholars, rabbis, educators and laity better informed, better equipped and more deeply committed to shaping modern life by canons of authentic Judaism under yard sticks of excellence," Dr. Cohen declared.

"I am consumed," he continued, "by the desire to draft new curricula, new forms of Jewish education, new theological formulation of the historic covenant which has launched our people in its history and sustained it to this day.

"That is why I have elected to devote my energies to what I consider the most vital task in American Jewish life today--the reshaping of Jewish education so as to mold Jewish character by the canons of Jewish religious tradition with in the framework of a free, strong, and highly motivated American Diaspora."
