

MINORITY GOVERNMENT

posts it held in the outgoing government, Religious Affairs, Interior, and Welfare, but indicated they would not be open indefinitely. Mrs. Meir apparently decided to take the risk of forming a minority government because of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's scheduled visit to the Middle East in an effort to get Israeli-Syrian disengagement talks started.

She is expected to have a majority in the Knesset on foreign policy matters but the government could be brought down on domestic issues.

Meanwhile as Mrs. Meir attempted to put a Cabinet together she was faced with the uncertainty of whether Defense Minister Moshe Dayan would be willing to serve. He had earlier said and repeated he would not join a new Cabinet "under present conditions," although he had said he would give Mrs. Meir "all possible assistance." Dayan apparently feels that he does not have sufficient support within the Labor Party. Nevertheless, his old Rafi faction is going along with the formation of a minority government despite its often stated preference for a national unity coalition that would include Likud.

LAS VEGAS ISRAELITE

THREAT TO WORLD JEWISH UNITY

TEL AVIV (WNS)--The National Religious Party's demand for halachic conversions threatens Jewish unity throughout the world & could prevent large scale immigration from America, Mrs. Naomi Levine, executive director of the American Jewish Congress, warned here.

Speaking at a panel discussion on "Who Decides Who is a Jew" at Bar Ilan University, Mrs. Levine said the N R P demand is not based on halachic requirements but on what appears to be efforts of the Orthodox rabbinate to obtain a monopoly on conversions.

Four American Orthodox faculty members,

Arnold Anker, dean of the Bar Ilan Law School and professors Charles Leibman, Howard Levine and Daniel Elazar disagreed stressing the dangers for Jewish integrity in "Free for all" conversions.
