MIDEAST DIFFERENCES NOT TERRITORY

NEW YORK (WNS) -- The quarrel in the Middle East is not "about that piece of territory or this piece of territory" but over the refusal by the Arabs to reconcile themselves to an independent Jewish state, Israeli Premier Yitzhak Rabin told 750 American Jewish leaders.

Speaking at a dinner sponsored jointly by the United Jewish Appeal and the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, Rabin said as long as the Arabs refuse to accept a Jewish state "I doubt if the road toward peace will be cleared." He said that Israel is more concerned with the substance than how it is achieved. Rabin said that in the search for peace Israel needs the partnership of the Jewish people, "particularly the unity of the Jewish communities of the United States and Canada," adding "we have learned that if we can trust anybody in this world it is the Jewish people." Noting that Israel has never asked anyone to defend her, only to provide her with the means for defense. Rabin said Israel has to bear a heavy defense burden while building "an economic and social structure that will allow us to be more independent, more a Jewish state."

Rabin in an "off the record" talk to leaders of the Israel Bond Organization in the United States and Canada, stressed the immediate military and economic aid from the U.S. was indispensable to Israel's security and to the success for effective negotiations for a peace settlement in the Middle East.

He said that Israel needs resources to solve its economic crisis. "This will be the critical year in the life of the Jewish people," he said. "It will be a year in which the unity of the Jewish people will be more essential than in the past because Israel will have to cope with more difficult and serious problems of defense."
