

SOVIET JEWS COMPARED TO U.S. SLAVES

NEW YORK (WNS) -- Benjamin J. Malcolm, New York City Correction Commissioner, has compared the plight of Soviet Jews with that of pre-Civil War slaves in the United States.

He told a press conference that just as slave owners sold Black family members to different parts of the South, Soviet authorities "have broken up families, permitting parents to emigrate and withholding permission for children, or have allowed children and loved ones to depart while refusing visas to parents. Malcolm, a Black Protestant, and New York attorney Ezra G. Levin, a Jew, spent two weeks in the Soviet Union recently, meeting with Soviet officials in charge of correctional institutions and visiting Jewish activists in Moscow, Lvov, Kiev, and Leningrad. They reported that they found their rooms searched, their activities monitored and the KGE outside the apartments of several of the "refuseniks" (those denied exit visas) they visited.
