KISSINGER: FORCE IF OIL PRICES THREATEN

NEW YORK (WNS) -- Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has said that he did not rule out the use of military action if Middle East oil policies were strangling the industrial nations.

Kissinger made his remarks in an interview with the magazine Business Week while stressing "the use of force would be considered only in the gravest emergency." He said it would be unwise for the United States to trade Israeli concessions to the Arabs for a reduction of oil prices because that would create the basis for pressures in the opposite direction. Underlining the importance of Kissinger's remarks was that the State Department distributed copies of the interview to newsmen. Kissinger's comments came after President Ford said that it would be "inappropriate" to comment on recurring reports that there is a National Security Council contingency plan for the U.S. to take over some Arab oil fields or help Israel to do so. In his interview, Kissinger responding to a question about the possibility of military action said that it was "a very dangerous course," but added, "I am not saying that there's no circumstances where we would not use force...It is one thing to use it in the case of a dispute over price. It's another where there is some actual strangulation of the industrialized world." But Kissinger stressed that any President resorting to force in the Middle East without considering what the Soviet Union would do would be reckless. "The question is to what extent he would let himself be deterred by it."

In the interview, Kissinger also declared that the possibility of

FRIDAY, JAN. 10, 1975 another Mideast war "is being talked about too loosely," and that the readiness of either side to go to war was often exaggerated. He said there was some possibility of political progress before this spring. Kissinger was sharply critical of European governments which had opposed American policy in the Mideast, noting that every strong action that was taken in the region was taken by the U.S. He said European hostility towards the U.S. stems from "an enormous feeling of insecurity" because "they recognize that their safety depends on the U.S."
