

AJC CALLS FOR NAT'L ENERGY POLICY

NEW YORK -- Criticizing the "reluctance" of government bodies to shape a national energy policy, the American Jewish Congress called for a "crash program" to conserve fuel, increase domestic oil production and develop alternative sources of energy. Leona Chanin, president of the organization's National Women's Division, released a study by the organization asserting:

"The public sector must assume responsibility to assure that resources are made available to meet our country's genuine energy needs.

"It is government that must develop a well-considered energy program, explain to the public why it is needed and how it will work and put it into effect.

"At stake in this effort is not only our country's economic health and that of our allies but also the effectiveness of American foreign policy.

Noting that "virtually nothing" had happened under Project Independence -- the Federal Energy program set up in the wake of the 1973 Arab oil embargo -- Mrs. Chanin declared:

"It is now clear that the usual reluctance of governmental bodies to make unpleasant and unpopular decisions has triumphed once again. The whole matter has been left to private industry and the play of the market place.

"But the promises of private industry have proved equally hollow. Development of domestic oil resources and of alternative sources of energy has been branded unprofitable and either abandoned or not even seriously undertaken."

In recommending ways to create new energy sources, the American Jewish Congress study urged reform of "current oil tax policies that serve as incentives for American companies to concentrate on oil production abroad rather than at home."
