

MOSCOW ACTIVISTS GET FIVE YEARS

NEW YORK (WNS) -- Mark Nashpitz and Boris Tsitlionok, the two Moscow Jewish activists who were charged with disturbing the public order, were sentenced to five years in exile by a Moscow district court, according to the National Conference on Soviet Jewry and the Students Struggle for Soviet Jewry. The sentence was pronounced a few hours after the beginning of the trial from which other Jewish activists and foreign newsmen were barred. Under Soviet law, exile means the two men cannot live in their hometown of Moscow. But there was no immediate word where they would be sent. Nashpitz, a 27-year-old dentist, and Tsitlionok, a 31-year-old plumber, were arrested with seven others for demonstrating outside the Lenin Library to protest the refusal of Soviet authorities to grant them emigration visas. The others were released or sentenced to 10-15 day jail terms.

Before the trial, the mothers of the two men, Itta Nashpitz and Batya Tsitlionok, both of whom now live in Israel, conducted a vigil outside the Soviet Embassy in London. After the sentence they came to New York where they joined in a demonstration outside the Soviet Mission to the United Nations. The demonstration included 20 rabbis, wearing prayer shawls, who protested the "blasphemous storm trooper tactics" used by the Soviet police in abruptly halting the Sabbath services in the Moscow synagogue and ordering hundreds of Jews to leave.
