Bar-Ilan Graduates

By Victor Perry

Meir Danino and his brother, Haim, the youngest of nine children of a former gardener at Bar-Ilan University, outside of Tel Aviv, were among the 750 recipients of degrees at the University's recent graduation ceremony. Meir, 22, received a B.Sc. in physics and Haim, 27, an M.Sc., also in physics.

Haim was born in Morocco from whence his parents came to Israel in 1951. Meir was born in a hut in the ma'abara transit camp at Zichron Yaacov where the family spent their first difficult years in the country, before moving to Bnei Brak, where they have lived ever since.

The father, a pious man, worked very hard so that all his children could study. Even when conditions were difficult he refused to let his children go out to work in order to help him.

When the father died seven years ago, the older brothers and sister helped to put the two youngest sons through University, choosing Bar-Ilan, Israel's only religious-oriented university. They excelled in their studies and managed to obtain several scholarships.

Today, Meir and Haim, who are both getting married soon, are high school teachers. Meir will be going on to obtain an M.Sc. in theoretical physics and Haim is beginning doctoral studies in experimental physics.

Among the 750 other recipients of degrees at Bar-Ilan University this year are 18 Arab students. Another four Arab students have received teachers' certificates. In addition, the first 24 graduates of the University's Yaacov Herzog School of Law have been granted the degree Bachelor of Laws this year. Though only founded in 1970, the School has already made its mark on the Israeli legal scene through innovative teaching methods and aims. One of its major objectives is to integrate the study of traditional Jewish law into the study of each parallel area of the civil law.

The first graduates of the University's Department of Translation and Interpretation also received their certificates this year.

At the graduation ceremony, honorary degrees of Doctor of Philosophy were conferred on Mr. Paul Zuckerman, Chairman of the World Fund-Raising Committee of the Jewish Agency and former Chairman of the UJA, and Rabbani Sarah Herzog, one of the main figures in Jewish community activities in Israel.
