WASHINGTON (WNS) -- The Senate approved by a decisive margin a resolution approving stationing of American technicians in the Sinai passes, completing Congressional action on the measure. Israel immediately signed the second Sinai interim accord, thus putting it into effect.

The Senate vote came after two days of debate, in which a succession of crippling amendments were all knocked out before the Senate approved the resolution 70 to 18. The Senate version was identical to one approved earlier in the week by the House. Israel had made its signing of the new interim agreement contingent on Congressional approval of the technicians plan.

Shortly before the Senate voted approval, President Ford -- in apparent anticipation of the favorable Senate vote -- told a press conference that recruiting of the expected 200 technicians would begin promptly. In response to a question, the President said the technicians would be civilians, highly qualified, very technically oriented individuals who have to operate very sophisticated equipment. The Senate resolution, like that of the House, specified that approval of the technicians did not commit the United States to other assurances or undertakings in connection with the second Sinai agreement, to either Israel or Egypt.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee had previously approved sending the American tech-

Let us look at the ramifications of the signed pact between Israel and Egypt, now that the U.S. Congress has sanctioned the stationing of 200 technicians to man look-out posts on the Sinai.

The world is looking towards the confrontation on the northern front between Israel and Syria. The U.N. mandate on the Syrian border is due to expire November 30. Just how much American pressure will be brought on Israel to come to a settlement before that date?

While multitudes of Jews throughout the world rejoice at the sunny prospect towards lasting peace, dark clouds of doubt are being cast in many areas. In Israel, opposition to the administration are sounding alarm that the deal involving the U.S. is selling out on their country. In America there are factions screaming we are getting involved in the Mideast conflict. Anti-Egyptian Arabs are condemning Egypt for recognition of Israel. Russia is agitating Syria to stand firm, while pouring billions in arms into that country. Syria is threatening to team up with Jordan for the next war on the books. The PLO is keeping the Moslem-Christian conflict alive in Lebanon to prevent that country from sympathizing with the Israeli-Egyptian accord. And from all sides comes demands to return Jerusalem to the Arabs.

Whew, and we thought the Egyptian accord would be welcomed by most as the first step towards lasting peace.

In Israel, Likud leader Menahem Begin accused the government of surrender by stages. It had abandoned its terms five times during the negotiations.

Gen Moshe Dayan called it a simple withdrawal and only a partial relaxation.

The Haaretz newspaper said the immediate future offered little room for optimism. The Histadrut's Davor said now the Syrians will push ahead with extremist demands. The afternoon paper, Yediot Aharenot claimed if Syria did not renew the U.N. mandate it would place Egypt in an uncomfortable position. The Jerusalem Post said the territorial integrity of the Golan Heights is no longer inviolable.

Rabin's opponents maintain the Prime Minister is no longer to be believed after he had stated there would be no withdrawals from the Sinai passes without a statement of non-belligerency by Egypt.

PLO's Arafat said if there were not withdrawals from Syria and the West Bank, the area

AID TO ISRAEL IS AMERICAN DEFENSE

NEW YORK (WNS) -- American should consider United States aid to Israel as part of the American global defense budget and not just foreign aid, according to Dr. Haim Ben-Shahar, president of Tel Aviv University.

He explained that if there was no outside influence on the Arab-Israeli conflict Israel could handle its own defense problems. But since the Soviet Union is heavily arming the Arab states, Ben-Shahar said, the Mideast has become part of the global conflict and aid to Israel benefits American global defense strategy.

Ben-Shahar made his remarks at a press conference at the office here of the American Friends of Tel Aviv University. He said that Israel's balance of payments deficit since the Yom Kippur War has been $3.5 billion a year as compared to $1.2 billion before the war and will now go up another half billion because of the need to buy the oil lost by Israel's relinquishing of the Abu Rodeis oilfields to the Egyptians. Ben-Shahar said two-thirds of Israel's deficit is due to the defense needs and Israel has been seeking to reduce the rest of the deficit by cutting government spending, four tax increases since the war and a continuing round of devaluations of the Pound.
