Moynihan Needed at UN

The expressions of "strong support" by President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger "for the effective job" being done by Daniel P. Moynihan as the United States Ambassador to the United Nations came not a minute too soon.

The outspoken Moynihan was rumored about to resign because of a lack of support from the American foreign policy establishment. Moynihan was recently severely castigated by British Ambassador Ivor Richard, an attack that was believed to have the support of some people in the State Department.

But Moynihan's resignation could have had disastrous results for American policy, especially in the Middle East. It would have been seen as a softening of the American stand against the resolution branding Zionism as racist and against the pro-Palestine Liberation Organization resolutions both of which were adopted by the UN General Assembly.

Moynihan has been criticized for "undiplomatic" language in the UN. But neither the Communist bloc nor the Arab nations have ever been noted for diplomatic niceties.

The American Ambassador has been saying some things that needed saying. Who can fault him for calling Uganda's Idi Amin a "racist murderer?" While he may have overdone it by including the Organization of African Unity in his attack, it is certainly ludicrous that this can be used by some African countries as their reason for voting in favor of the anti-Zionist resolution.

Israeli leaders have long argued that the attack on Israel is the first step of an attack on the West itself. Moynihan has said that the democratic countries are under attack and has defended Israel as an island of democracy in a sea of despotism.

If Moynihan's outspoken approach at the UN is heard by the Third World countries they must stop allowing themselves to be used for propaganda and begin to deal with their real problems.

Behind The Scenes

At The United Nations

Moynihan Stays On

UNITED NATIONS (WUP) -- On the verge of resigning from his UN post due to the fact that some State Department officials under Kissinger's prodding had threatened to muzzle his voice here at the UN, Daniel Patrick Moynihan was hastily summoned to the White House by President Ford last week for a face to face talk during which the courageous U.S. spokesman spoke out his mind in a confrontation that must have shaken the President to the realization that a loss of the most popular man in America today would have erupted into a sort of a revolution in the Administration.

The 'confrontation' lasted some 40 minutes, the last 10 of which brought Kissinger on the scene. The fact that the Secretary of State was not present for the whole meeting should reveal something. It revealed what most observers had surmised from the very beginning, namely, that differences had arisen between the two men, that Kissinger was responsible for Moynihan's threat to resign. For Kissinger, the super-super 'compromiser' that he is in his attempts to be a 'good guy' with everyone, the good and the bad, Moynihan had been too direct and outspoken vis-a-vis the 'bad' here at the UN -- the Arabs, the Soviets and most of the third world states -- and that for our Jewish State Department chief was not 'diplomatic' enough to his liking.

To prevent another shake-up in his Administration -- especially on the eve of an election year and following so soon after the firing of Schlesinger, etc. -- President Ford 'convinced' Moynihan to remain in his post on his, Moynihan's terms, as became clear from press secretary Ron Nessen's statement made directly after the confrontation confab. "The President," he said "wants it clearly understood that Ambassador Moynihan has his complete confidence. The President and Secretary Kissinger encouraged Ambassador Moynihan to continue to speak out candidly and forcefully on major issues coming before the United Nations."

Thus, the most courageous Ambassador Washington has ever accredited to this 'Reform School' returned to his post ever so much stronger and vindicated of the bold stand he had taken vis-a-vis Israel's enemies who, throughout this 30th session, have felt the sting of his sharp, outspoken tongue.

It was Moynihan's criticism of Uganda's Idi Amin as a "racist murderer" and, indirectly, of the Organization of African Unity (OAU) states which Amin heads, but more especially of his fighting speeches in the Third Committee and in the General Assembly, which had adopted resolutions equating Zionism with racism, that had disturbed the State Department.

On the other hand, it was this bold stance that he had taken which won him national popularity and high praise voiced by the media in general and by the public in particular.

Moynihan's speech delivered in the General Assembly on November 10 -- a day that he said "will live in infamy" -- will undoubtedly be recorded in the annals of history as a document of the greatest historic significance in that it charged the United Nations with reenacting the Nazi scenario which witnessed mankind's worst holocaust that decimated one third of the Jewish people.

"The General Assembly" he declared after the anti-Semitic vote was adopted, "today grants symbolic amnesty, and more, to the murderers of the six million Jews...The proposition to be sanctioned by a resolution of the Assembly is that 'Zionism is a form of racism and racial discrimination.' Now that is a lie, but it is a lie which the UN has declared to be a truth, and so the actual truth must be restated."

Pointing to the fact that the UN has never defined the term "racism", Moynihan repeated his charge: "What we have here is a lie, a political lie of a variety well known to the 20th century, and scarcely exceeded in all that annal

Arabs have been pulling off, and getting away with, to the detriment of the American public. And each time it's in the guise of a reprisal against Israel but it's no such thing at all.

The Arabs triple the price of oil. Instead of the administration taking a firm stand with economic retaliation, it allowed, probably encouraged the public to panic. Almost immediately, with refineries overflowing and tankers waiting to unload, gas pumps were empty and there were long lines of cars begging for a couple of gallons.

Then the wheat deal. For years, we paid farmers not to plant and bought at the top price all excess product. The wheat was laying in bins, stored to capacity. A deal was made to sell the wheat to Russia. Almost the next day, the price of bread here in the U.S. went up and up. Can any right thinking American understand and remain still for that?

The next scam was the Arab/Russian/Afro majority voting Israel out of UNESCO, claiming Israeli archaeologists are ruining holy historic sights in the Mideast. This outrageous happening still stands although the world knows the Jews brought nothing but culture, exploration, education and progress to a centuries-old desert waste. It was the Arabs, prior to the 6-Day War in 1967, who devastated Jewish holy lands, using slabs of the Wailing Wall for flooring in toilets. It was the Arabs who demolished the Hadassah Hospital in Jerusalem. Instead of utilizing its facilities, one of the finest medical institutions in the world was laid to waste. Before and since, under Jewish supervision more Arabs have been patients at Hadassah Hospital than all other nationalities combined. The U.S. benefits by Jews operating this hospital because it is American taxpayer's money that goes to countries needing medical aid, food and development.

The next plot was the Arab boycott against American business firms friendly to Israel. This is a direct demonstration of Arab influence creating restrictive trade practices over Americans. It is clearly against U.S. law. That is why the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is about to recommend a citation for contempt of Congress against Commerce Secretary Rogers Morton for refusing to provide the list of firms complying with the boycott. How do you like this action from a cabinet member after Ford, earlier, had prohibited the Arab boycott from discriminating against Americans?

Then came the infamous UN resolution equating Zionism with racism. The most outspoken, immediate denunciation came from U.S. Ambassador to the UN, Daniel Moynihan. So what happened? Moynihan was summoned to Washington and was about to resign, before, as he expected, to be fired. But Ford and Kissinger backed off, for the moment. Then Ford released a glowing statement of confidence in Moynihan, which, in politics, is tantamount to the rise before the fall.

Let's not kid ourselves. Russia creates hostility and is the chief source for unrest in the world. Using the Arabs as foils and Israel as the pawn, the Soviets will keep pecking away until the time comes ripe for them to use any incident as a cause for war. That's what the Chinese are telling Ford at this very moment.

We are not suggesting open warfare with Russia, far from it. What we are promulgating, and will continue as long as we have a public outlet, is alerting the American public to the ultimate, ugly goal of the Soviets.

Honest detent on our part makes us the laughing stock of the nations of the world. How can you expect conformation from the Russians who signed a resolution at Helsinki respecting human rights? This brazenly is being violated since the moment it was agreed. They not only stepped up persecution against the Soviet Jews, they also refuse to allow a Nobel Prize winner to leave Russia to accept the award.

Don't you think it's about time we put our foot down on appeasement? You cannot pacify an ugly monster. We do not advocate beating the rattlesnake to the strike. All we are asking is not to fatten a potential foe.
