UNESCO RESOLUTION

PARIS (WNS) -- A resolution charging Israel with preventing Arabs in the occupied territories "from freely exercising their inalienable rights to the education and culture necessary to the preservation of their national identity" was adopted by UNESCO's executive board by a 26-1 vote.

The United States cast the sole negative vote while 10 other countries abstained. The Arab countries who had toned down the resolution received the support of Belgium, Italy, France and Japan.

Israel is not a member of the executive board, but its chief delegate, M. Bar Yaakov, noted that almost 100 percent of the school age children in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip attended classes where Egyptian and Jordanian textbooks are in use. He said the only exceptions were 14 books which UNESCO had judged anti-Semitic after the Six-Day War.

LEBANESE JEWS FACE NEW PERILS

NEW YORK (WUP) -- A report received here from the Paris office of the American Jewish Committee reveals that a new peril faces the Jews in Lebanon. The report, based on a lengthy interview with recent Jewish arrivals from that strife-torn country, notes that "two aspects of the situation stand out. One is that the position of Jews has definitely deteriorated. This change," the report points out, "began after the aborted army coup, with the reconciliation between Arafat and Habash's Rejection Front, and the more intensive participation of Syrian troops, the terrorist Saiqa group and others with deep animosity to Jews.

"Until then," the report adds, "the Lebanese Jews had enjoyed a privileged 'neutral' position that was respected by all the Lebanese factions, including Fatah; but the new elements in the fighting read 'Israelite' on the Jewish identity cards as synonymous with 'Israeli' and are prepared to arrest, even kill, unless some Lebanese bystander -- sometimes Fatah, sometimes Falange -- is there to speak up."

"The second aspect on which all the refugees seem agreed is the community's deep sense of isolation and the absence of any central leadership to provide aid and counsel..."
