NEW YORK (WNS) -- Concern about the survival of the Jewish minority as a cultural and religious entity in the Soviet Union was expressed by the Congress for Jewish Culture in a telegram to Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin in Washington. The telegram was sent on the eve of the 25th anniversary of the execution of 24 Soviet Yiddish writers and poets by the Stalin regime on August 12, 1952. Dr. Israel Knox, president, and Hyman Bass, executive director of the Congress, said in the telegram that the executions "resulted in the liquidation of all Jewish cultural institutions and schools" in the USSR. "We urge the restitution to Soviet Jewry all cultural rights guaranteed by the Soviet constitution to national minorities."

Meanwhile, the National Conference on Soviet Jewry commemorated the 25th anniversary of the executions with a symposium at the Graduate Center of the City University of New York. David Markish, son of the Soviet Yiddish writer Peretz Markish, who was one of the 24, said the family were not told until years later that the writers had been killed. Markish, who now lives in Israel, is also a writer.

Norman Podhoretz, editor of Commentary, said that the "official attitude towards Jewish culture in the USSR has not improved" since 1952 but the executions caused a revival in the interest in Jewish culture among Jews. Simon Weber, editor of the Jewish Daily Forward, said the proper commemoration of those who were killed can be found in the hundreds of thousands who in recent years have asked for and received exit visas to go to Israel.
