

BEGIN, SADAT PLEDGE NO MORE WAR

OSLO (WNS) -- Israeli Premier Menachem Begin promised "no more war, no more blood and no more enmity" as he received his share of the 1978 Nobel Prize for Peace here Dec. 10. Egyptian President, who was represented at the ceremony by former Parliament Speaker Said Marai, also pledged an end to war in the Middle East.

Both men praised President Carter for his role in the current peace efforts as did the Nobel Peace Committee. Sadat's message, read by Marai, referred to the difficulties that still must be overcome. "We have now come to a moment of the truth in the peace process which requires each one of us to take a new look at the situation," Sadat declared. He said his trip to Israel "was not to strike a deal as some politicians do. I made my trip because I was convinced that we owe it to this generation and to generations to come." Begin repeatedly stressed Israel's desire for peace. "At Camp David, despite all the differences, we found solutions for problems, agreed on issues and the framework for peace was signed," Begin stressed. He said that a peace treaty with Egypt "can serve as the first indispensable step along the road toward a comprehensive peace in our region."

Begin also pointed to the plight of Soviet Jewry which he said "now wants to go home -- home to Israel." He paid tribute to the memory of former Premier Golda Meir who, he said, "strive with all her heart to achieve peace between Israel and her neighbors." The audience, which included King Olav V, stood in a moment of silence in tribute to Mrs. Meir. The ceremony took place in a 13th century Norwegian fortress. Begin and his wife Aliza arrived from the Royal Castle where they had stayed as guests of the King. In central Oslo there were demonstrations by pro-Palestinians against the award.

use his $175,000 share of the prize money for retarded children.

Sadat plans to use his share for the development of his native village.

Ask a travel agent about TWA Getaway Vacations

When it comes to planning a vacation, travel agents are the experts. They can offer you just about everyone's product, not only TWA's. They can help you by discussing all of them, so you can decide which vacation is best for you.

You pay the same if you buy direct from, say, TWA or a travel agent. The difference is the many valuable services a travel agent performs. From issuing an air ticket, to planning a European vacation, they do the running around and take care of all details.

Most travel agents have probably been to where you're thinking of going. They can tell you about hotels, climate, clothes, packing, passports, visas, what to expect, places to eat, things to buy.

And once you select your travel agent, you're in for a lot of good, free advice.
