HUGHES AIRWEST FORECASTS WEATHER

Hughes Airwest has become the world's first commercial airline to employ a super-accurate computerized meteorological system that "sees" the nation's weather as fast as Mother Nature creates derstorms and tornadoes and such airport visibility problems as heavy blowing sand, dust or snow," he said. "We should have fewer weather-caused flight delays by being able to foresee adverse conditions before taking off and avoiding enroute turbulence by pre-directing flights around it. The end result should prove to be safer, softer and more comfortable flights for our passengers," Altman said. Under the agreement, Hughes Airwest gets forecasts, every eight hours covering its entire service region that spans the U.S. from Canada to Mexico and extends as far east as Milwaukee, Denver and instantly relayed by the airline's 24-hour flight control nerve center to all the carrier's airport operations centers and aircraft in flight.

In turn, the operations centers and aircraft report to flight control all observed unusual weather conditions. This information is routed back to Global for insertion into the computerized forecasting system. The sophisticated system - a Space Age spin-off - uses an eye-in-the-sky
