

DON RICKLES AT SAHARA STARTING MONDAY FOR 10 DAYS

Opening tonight in the Congo Showroom of Hotel Sahara for two days only are Johnny Carson and Phyllis McGuire; Sunday the room is dark, on Monday, Don Rickles and Glenn Smith open for 10 days.

Johnny Carson has been in the news recently with his announced intentions to quit the "Tonight" show prematurely. Whether he does or not, Sahara showgoers know that his Congo Room performances offer a different Carson, one whom TV watchers never see.

Along with co-star Phyllis McGuire, the show will be a sell-out for all four performances (9 and 12:30, cocktails only).

On Monday, Mr. Warmth takes over and brings with him a multi-talented performer - Glenn Smith.

Rickles has been a Sahara headliner for many years. His unique brand of humor has paved the way for the new young comics who now realize that you can be successful without conforming to the strict traditions of your craft.

BRIGHT - The millions who thrilled to the old Edgar Bergen-Charley McCarthy banter will love Stu Scott, appearing nightly at the Flamingo Hilton in the lavish new ice spectacular, "Razzle Dazzle". His material is bright, hilarious and timely and audiences can easily relate to the characters used by Scott. The Stu Scott dummies have two distinct personalities. George is a very cocky crow who's got more heckle than Heckel and Jeckel. The other dummy is Barney, a lovable boozing frog.

Not too many people can claim their rise to stardom began when they were only "horsing around" - but that's exactly what happened with superstar Virginia Mayo.

Mayo is currently delighting Las Vegas audiences with her performances as Mrs. Markham in the Union Plaza Hotel's production of "Too Many For The Bed," on stage twice nightly in the hotel showroom. But her name wasn't yet a box office draw when she was accepted while still a teen-ager as a ballet member of the St. Louis Municipal Opera Company, and followed that with a contract for "Pansy The Horse" - a comedy act that toured all over the United States playing theatres and nightclubs. It was only shortly thereafter that Hollywood beckoned - and Virginia Clara Jones was on her way to stardom.

One role that earned her part of that stardom was that of Mrs. Markham in coast to coast productions of the play now at the Plaza, but under the original title of "Move Over, Mrs. Markham," playing a good-hearted New York housewife who suddenly finds her apartment the scene of one too many trysts.

Helping add to the comedy are Art Kassul, Bob Zay, Sheila Doyle, Tony Russel, Constance Cawfield, Bill DeLand, Vivian Brown, and Dyanne Thorne.

Zay, who plays the apparently limp-wristed Alistair Spenlow, is making his first Las Vegas appearance, but he's no newcomer to the business.

He's appeared in over 150 productions, with credits ranging from off-Broadway to Broadway to movies and television. He's also toured with Carolyn Jones in the role of Alistair in "Too Many For The Bed," and just completed "Freedom Road" for television with Muhammed Ali and Kris Kristofferson.

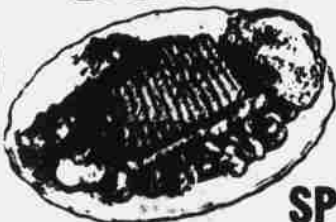

Mayo was discovered by movie mogul Sam Goldwyn, but it was under Warner Brothers that she became their top box office draw during what has been called "the golden age of film."

At home in Thousand Oaks, California, Mayo spends her time dabbling in oils and watercolors.
