

WOMAN RABBI HAS NO PROBLEMS

NEW YORK (WNS) -- A woman rabbi declared here that she has found no resistance or objections to her as rabbi of a Conservative synagogue in Coatsville, Pa. Instead, Rabbi Linda Holtzman, who became rabbi at Beth Israel in Coatsville after graduating in 1979 from the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College, said she was sought out for such ceremonies as weddings within the congregation. Holtzman spoke to some 100 members of a new organization, the Group For the Rabbinic Ordination of Women (GROW) which is seeking to persuade the Jewish Theological Seminary of America (JTS) to accept women as rabbinical candidates for Conservative Judaism. The meeting was the second major event by GROW since it demonstrated in front of the JTS building against the decision by the school's Faculty Senate to postpone indefinitely any seminary faculty action on ordaining women. Rabbi Mayer Rabinowitz, professor of Talmud at the seminary, told the gathering that the major issue was political not halachic. He said the only question was whether women could serve as witnesses and this could be resolved by rabbinical interpretation.

Bernice Balter in the Bronx, wife of Shlomo Balter, rabbi of the Conservative Synagogue of Riverdale in the Bronx, where the GROW meeting was held, said that while the seminary faculty has tabled the issue of ordaining women, it will be raised again at the November convention of the Women's League for Conservative Judaism of which she is executive director.
