

ISRAEL ANGRILY

rael was seeking to find who committed the bombings and the Security Council should not give "reign to suspicions."

Meanwhile, Israel rejected the United Nations Security Council resolution, condemning "the assassination attempts" against West Bank mayors and accusing Israel of failure "to provide adequate protection to the civilian population in the occupied territories."

A Cabinet statement, read to reporters by Premier Menachem Begin after the Cabinet meeting, accused the Council of using the bomb attacks against the mayors of Nablus, Ramallah and El Bireh as a pretext to renew demands for Israel's total withdrawal from the West Bank and the redivision of Jerusalem.

"This will never do," Begin declared after charging the resolution was in contravention of Security Council Resolution 242. U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis said here that the United States would have vetoed the resolution if it had contained any clause contradictory to Resolution 242. He said the U.S. did not believe it contained such a clause and had abstained in the 14 - 0 Council vote.

The formal statement read by Begin contended that "There was no need for the Security Council's condemnation of the (bomb) attacks nor for it to urge a prompt investigation be held and the miscreants apprehended, tried and punished by due process." All of this was already promised by "Israel's authorized spokesman" 72 hours before the Security Council went into session, Begin said.

The statement imputed hypocrisy to the Council. It detailed a long list of Palestinian terrorist attacks against Israelis and others, from the 1972 Munich Olympics massacre to assaults in Athens, Brussels and various parts of Israel, up to the May 2 ambush killing of six yeshiva students in Hebron. On none of those occasions was the Security Council called into to expand the land holdings of Kiryat Arba and seven other Jewish settlements on the West Bank. The plans, drawn up by a ministerial subcommittee headed by Sharon, reportedly does not call for the confiscation of privately owned Arab land.

session nor was any condemnation forthcoming from the Council against the perpetrators of those attacks, the statement said.
