FULTON FISH MARKET

"Royal" aptly describes the cuisine and atmosphere of the newly opened Royal Americana 3rd Avenue Steakhouse and Fulton Fish Market. At the restaurant's recent gala opening dinner, attended by some of the community's most influential media representatives, the party-goers were treated to choice seafood and beef main courses, accented by gourmet appetizers, salad bar, vegetables and desserts.

of Horn and Hardart rank among the best in town and are complemented by the talents of a professionally fine-tuned staff and an impressively intimate decor that set the mood for the entire dining experience.

Lawyers and Ethics

BY RABBI MARC H. TANENBAUM

Recently I was invited to take part in the commencement exercises of the New York Law School, one of the more prestigious law schools in the New York area.

It seemed evident to me that the eager, bright - faced young men and women were solidly trained in the mechanics of law. Nowhere during the commencement, however, did anyone raise the crucial questions of the moral and ethical responsibilities of lawyers to society at large.

In an age that verges on moral anarchy -- so much crime, corruption, violence -- it seemed to me that raising the consciousness of young lawyers about their ethical behavior and responsibility was at least as important as acquiring skills on how to draft a will. During my commencement remarks, I sought to face that issue by recalling for the law graduates that Moses was the greatest law-giver in human history. According to the Book of Deuteronomy (16:18) the first act that Moses undertook in setting up the Hebrew Commonwealth in Palestine was to appoint judges to administer justice "at every gate."

The moral instruction that Moses gave to the Hebrew judges was relevant to contemporary judges and lawyers: "You shall judge the people with righteous judgment. You shall not pervert judgment; you shall not show partiality. Neither shall you take a bribe, for a bribe does not blind the eyes of the wise and pervert the cause of the righteous and innocent. Justice, justice shall you pursue that you may live."

Justice Louis Brandeis stood four-square in Moses' tradition when he declared, "What the lawyer needs to redeem himself is not more (technical) ability but the moral courage in the face of financial loss and personal ill-will to stand for right and justice -- and if we desire respect for the law, we must first make the law respectable."

JERUSALEM (WNS) -- Political sources denied a Cairo report that Premier Menachem Begin gave President Anwar Sadat of Egypt private assurances that Israel has no intention of adopting a bill presented to the Knesset in May declaring united Jerusalem to be Israel's capital. The report, by Anis Mansour, published in the Egyptian weekly October, claimed that Begin told Sadat in a personal message that the measure, a private member's bill, which the Knesset passed on first reading was merely a "political exercise."
