

LABOR PARTY HAS PLAN FOR WEST BANK

TEL AVIV (WNS) -- The Labor Party has unveiled its proposal for the West Bank which calls for a Jordanian-Palestinian state to which Israel would cede portions of the West Bank not essential to its security. The party, which expects to campaign on the "Jordanian option" in 1981, is still opposed to a separate Palestinian state between Jordan and Israel. The proposal was drafted by a committee headed by veteran Laborite Israel Galili and which included former Foreign Minister Abba Eban, former Justice Minister Haim Zadok and former Police Minister Shlomo Hillel. "We will not dictate to this Jordanian - Palestinian state what form of government it ought to have or who should head it," Galili said in a radio interview. "That would be the business of its citizens and they would have to choose between (King) Hussein, (Yasir) Arafat or someone else." This was the first time a leading Israeli had suggested that Israel could live in peace with a country led by the head of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Galili said that the platform insists that Jerusalem remain Israel's united capital under its full sovereignty with free access to all holy places. Meanwhile, Labor Party chairman Shimon Peres, attending the Socialist International conference in Madrid, has gotten the organization of Socialist parties from 60 countries, to agree to study the "Jordanian option." Previously the Socialist International had been leaning toward a "Palestinian solution." Socialist leaders elect's own prefer-admitted privately that once for a Jordanian solution influenced their decision.
