

PEACE PLAN FOR LEBANON

point peace plan. Its formula consisted of:

1. A total cease - fire of all forces including the guerrillas of the PLO.
2. Restoration of Lebanese governmental sovereignty over its entire territory and the establishment of full control and jurisdiction.
3. Internationally - supervised elections for a constituent assembly to draft a new constitution.
4. Non - intervention from outside into the internal affairs of Lebanon.
5. Withdrawal of all foreign forces and foreign military installations including the so-called Syrian peace - keeping force.
6. Disarmament of all para - military organizations, such as the PLO.
7. Opening of peace negotiations between Israel and Lebanon under UN resolutions 242 and 338.

Having presented this formula, Ambassador Rafael noted that Lebanon, which has no territorial problems with Israel, has always maintained that it wanted peace with Israel but did not want to be the first Arab country to negotiate directly with the Jewish state. "That pretext doesn't hold anymore," Rafael declared, referring to the Egyptian peace treaty with Israel.

He did not believe that war would erupt at the present time.

In concluding his fascinating book, Rafael discusses an encounter he had with Moshe Dayan on the question of the Camp David accords.

"When we met again at the end of March 1978, on the eve of my retirement," he writes, "the negotiations with Egypt had come to a standstill. The positions of the two sides was diametrically opposed on the Palestinian issue. That spring the Israeli government had rejected as heresy texts which in the autumn it had accepted at Camp David as binding policy. Dayan asked me whether I believed in the sincerity of Sadat's intentions. I answered that I would advise respect for him for his audacious initiative and his proclaimed peaceful intentions and suspicion of him until he gave convincing proof of his readiness to achieve peace by mutual accommodation.

"I asked what was to happen next. 'How would I know,' growled Dayan, rocking in his ministerial swivel - chair. 'I wouldn't even know how much longer I'll occupy this seat.' By some awful swivelling he held on to it for another eighteen months. When he eventually resigned in November 1979 the discussions between Israel and Egypt on the establishment of full autonomy for the inhabitants of the West Bank and the Gaza area, as envisaged in the Camp David agreement, had reached a complete impasse. Realizing that his original hypothesis -- the acceptance of Israel's rule over Judea, Samaria and Gaza for the return of Sinai to Egypt -- did not work, he withdrew from the scene. In our talk, Dayan was obviously disinclined to discuss the state of the stalled peace negotiations. He had some amiable words in connection with my retirement intimating that he himself longed for that blissful state of freedom from bondage. . ."

In an answer to a question on the autonomy plan, he noted that whatever "measures to be taken during the five years specified may allow a period for the furnishing of a 'waiting room' in preparation for the 'living - room' -- all depending on global developments."

NETHERLANDS' CHIEF IS CRITICIZED

JERUSALEM (WNS) -- Foreign Minister Christoph van der Klaauw of the Netherlands, current chairman of the Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community (EEC) said upon his arrival in Israel that he was frankly doubtful that the European initiative in the Middle East could indeed lead to a comprehensive peace in the region. However, he said he would continue his efforts to solicit the views of various parties concerned. Van de Klaauw's visit is the second part of a fact finding mission undertaken on behalf of the EEC.

Officials in Israel criticized the EEC chairman starting with Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir who expressed "displeasure" when he greeted van der Klaauw that he had seen fit to meet with the head of an organization that has the avowed purpose of destroying Israel. Van der Klaauw's meeting with Premier Menachem Begin resulted in a tight - lipped van der Klaauw refusing to reply to reporters' questions.

Begin said, "I asked him what right the EEC tells us how we would arrange the security of our people." However, Israeli sources said that the meeting, though tough, was not unpleasant in tone or atmosphere. Begin told reporters that van der Klaauw had "shaken a hand covered with the blood of Israeli children," when he met with Palestinian Liberation Organization chief Yasir Arafat in Beirut during the month of April. Also holding reservations to the EEC initiative, were Labor Party chairman Shimon Peres and foreign affairs spokesman Abba Eban who attacked the Dutch Minister in a separate session with him in the Knesset for the EEC 'giving legitimacy to the PLO.'

AJC GETS EUROPEAN PLAN

WASH. (WNS) -- A report of experts from eight Western European countries, submitted by the American Jewish Committee's Foreign Affairs Department to the AJC's 75th anniversary meeting here concluded that increased anti-Semitism in Western Europe during the past few years calls for heightened vigilance and continued protest, not exaggerated alarm. The report is based on the experts conference on anti-Semitism held in Amsterdam at the end of March, and was discussed at a meeting of the AJC's Foreign Affairs Commission chaired by Rita Hauser, the Commission's chairperson.

In the report, the AJC pointed to these recent events and trends indicating the rise in anti-Semitism: A receding memory of the past that categorizes the Holocaust as "one of the many tragedies of world history and if anything, a push to surfeit." A development in France of a New Right, varying quite distinctly from the "New Right" here in the United States, but with "insidious anti-egalitarian and anti-Judeo - Christian civilization ideas, cleverly making affinities to Aryan supremacy and racist notions under guise of 'culture' and on a political stance. Also the amalgam of anti-Zionism and anti-Semitism, according to experts at the Amsterdam meeting, has been a major influence in the growth of anti - Semitic sentiments and acts of the past few years.

The report makes some suggestions or counter measures that include education with efforts to uproot prejudice and intolerance, countering old stereotypes of Jews with more positive images of Jewish contributions to history through the media. A system of alliances with other minorities, and finally exposing individuals or groups that are the source of anti-Semitism, revision and super race ideologies.

SOVIET SHIP NEAR ISRAEL

JERUSALEM (WNS) -- The 35,000 ton anti - submarine helicopter carrier Moskva is cruising the eastern Mediterranean off the Lebanese coast but an Israeli expert said that it was more a symbolic gesture than a deterrence in the current missile crisis.

Dr. Amnon Sella, head of the Hebrew University's Institute for Soviet Affairs, said this act was directed to Syria as a show of solidarity as well as a warning to Israel and the Americans to show that the Soviets consider themselves partners in any possible solution to the present crisis. Sella added that the Russians are not interested in a full scale war erupting between Syria and Israel because they are aware that the balance of power favors Israel. However, Sella said that if the Russians could guarantee a limited confrontation, that would bring them back into the Middle East negotiations, they probably would have opted for such a development by now. Reports from Moscow quoted a senior Communist Party official as saying the situation in Lebanon calls for "patient negotiations and for peaceful means of solving this question." The official blamed Israel for the tension and spoke in derogatory terms of American efforts to mediate but gave no hint of Soviet involvement.

JERUSALEM (WNS) -- Likud Knesset member Moshe Katzav disclosed that ten Iranian Jews, among them the acting Chief Rabbi, Baruch Cohen - Tzedek, have been detained by the Iranian authorities for allegedly helping other Jews to leave the country. Katzav, chairman of the Iranian Immigrants Association in Israel, said the 10 were promised they would be released in exchange for large sums of ransom money, but the promise has not been kept.

DETROIT (WNS) -- Thirty four leaders of the Coalition for Reagan-Bush have agreed to continue as an organization of Jewish Republicans it was announced by Max Fisher.
