

Begin dismissed a proposal by Josef Burg, leader of the NRP, to form a national unity government of Likud and the Labor Alignment. "These are hectic days and all sorts of suggestions are heard," Begin said. He lashed out at Labor party leader Shimon Peres who Begin said flatly rejected his own past invitations to form a national unity coalition.

Begin replied harshly when it was suggested that his new coalition might take a harder line on issues than the former Cabinet which included Ezer Weizman and Moshe Dayan. Begin said, "Moderate, extremist, empty phraseology... My government will be good, efficient, compact... Government is composed of groups, they discuss matters. The majority decides. Usually it is by consensus. There is no problem of moderates or hard line. Problems are solved on their own merits."

Begin said Israel "knows everything" about the joint naval maneuvers being conducted by the Soviet Union and Syria off the Syrian coast. He said they were no threat to Israel. They may be a problem for the U.S., "for the commander of the Sixth Fleet and the government that gives him orders," not for Israel, he said.

On the Syrian missile crisis, Begin said he would give special U.S. envoy Philip Habib more time for finding a diplomatic solution to the problem. He added however that "we can't wait forever. If they are not removed we will have to use our own means to remove them."

Begin said he thought the suspension of F-16 deliveries to Israel by the United States hurt them more than Israel. "It (the suspension) shouldn't have taken place at all." He said Israel expects to receive the six F-16's not affected by the embargo on their delivery date, July 17, and also the four embargoed planes. He reacted with anger when asked if Israel would continue to use American equipment to attack Palestinian terrorist bases in Lebanon. "We have a perfect right. It is legitimate self. It is in self-defense. This is exactly what is stated in our agreement" with the U.S., he said.

RUMANIA GETS GOOD REPORT

WASH. (WNS) -- Jack Spitzer, president of B'nai B'rith International, told a congressional panel that the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations supports another one-year approval of the most favored nation (MFN) status for Rumania in view of its record on Jewish emigration. But he said continued close scrutiny was necessary, as well as changes in its procedures required by Rumania for applicants for emigration.

Spitzer, testifying on behalf of the Presidents Conference before the House Ways and Means Committee's Subcommittee on Trade which is considering extension of Rumania's MFN status, said, "We find the agreement (on freer Jewish emigration from Rumania) is being substantially fulfilled and we have received cooperation from the Rumanian government, but many problems are still to be resolved."

One of these problems, according to Spitzer, was the requirement that prospective emigrants must appear at a police station to request the appropriate forms.

best prospects for forming a government -- it was Likud that would be called to undertake this task after Navon has conferred with all the factions as required by law. Begin called for national reconciliation. He said it was appropriate that the Cabinet's first decision after the election should be to grant university status to the Labor Party's Teacher's College at Beit Berl.

The Labor Party meanwhile has all but given up efforts to form a new government and is now focusing on preparations for the opening of the Knesset where it plans to play the role of a fighting and effective opposition. There were reports that Labor would form a unitary parliamentary bloc with Shinui and the CRM to become the largest single faction. That would give Labor first choice in the allocation of the key committee chairmanships in the house. Labor now hopes that the new Begin government would be vulnerable to opposition assault and fall within a few months. There is talk already of the early elections coinciding with the municipal elections scheduled for November 1982.

SEX AND THE MIDDLE AGES

TEL AVIV (WNS) -- Both males and females living in Mediterranean countries live according to concepts of the middle ages as far as sex is concerned, according to French Sexologist Gilbert Tordjman who addressed part of an international symposium here.

"For them sex is characterized by a strong sense of culpability, neurotic behavior and by a deprecating attitude toward women," he told the 50 participants from Israel, France, Spain and Italy in the course of a discussion of sex and religion and adolescent sexuality.
