

JUNE WILKINSON STARS IN
"MISTRESS"

What's blonde and beautiful and currently setting box office records in the classiest showroom in town? If you guessed June Wilkinson, you're right. The woman Hugh Hefner once dubbed "The Bosom" broke box office records all over the country when she made her Broadway debut in the sassy, sexy "Pajama Tops" -- and now she's doing it again in the air-conditioned comfort of the Union Plaza Hotel where she's the star of the delightful "Ninety Day Mistress."

Also featured in the 'sex-rated' show are Vaughn Armstrong, Eve McVeagh, Gale Baker, Carle Bensen, Seth Foster, and Tony Gaetano.

June Wilkinson got her first taste of the performer's life in jolly old England where she was appearing in prestigious West End Theaters when she was only 12. When she was 17, she decided to come to America and promptly took a turn as a guest on "The Today Show."

That was her first day in America. Her second day, she posed for Playboy Magazine and since appeared in Hefner's magazine more than any other female.

Starring with Wilkinson in "Ninety Day Mistress" is Seth Foster, who manages to keep in shape with an impressive array of athletic activities: he's a professional motorcycle dirt rider, a competition saddle bronc rider, a "B" tennis player, a 10-handicap golfer and recently took up snorkeling.

On stage, television Foster appeared with Dale Robertson in "Kansas City Massacre" and also guest-starred on the popular television series "Three's Company," "Forever Fernwood," and "Charlie's Angels." He also completed his first film, "Touchstone," due for release later this year.

"Ninety Day Mistress" plays at 8 and 11:45 p.m.
