

BEGIN CONFRONTS SINAI SETTLERS

JERUSALEM (WNS) -- Warning that his government is determined to prevent lawless acts which are aimed at jeopardizing the peace treaty with Egypt, Prime Minister Menachem Begin confronted the Yamit settlers and their supporters who are trying to prevent Israel's withdrawal from Sinai. The Prime Minister told the delegation representing the settlers that road blocks set up by the army to prevent further infiltration of the region by militants would remain in place and that any attempt to remove them would be in violation of the law and would be dealt with severely.

Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, has reportedly received unanimous support among the Cabinet ministers who he briefed on the situation in that area. Sharon personally issued the orders for the road blocks, a move that many in the Cabinet and Knesset considered long overdue. The militants moving into the Yamit area in an attempt to forestall withdrawal are mainly Orthodox Jews.

The Yamit settlers, meanwhile, built their own roadblocks around the town out of tractors and other vehicles to keep the army out. But they removed the barriers after Chief of Staff Rafael Eitan arrived on the scene. He told them that he did not have the power to change government policy but would present their point of view to the government.

Some settlers, about a few hundred families in Yamit, only quarrel with the government is over the amount of compensation they will receive for abandoning their property and relocating. They are playing for time and keep aloof from the demonstrations. But the extremists, mainly religious Jews from the West Bank and Israel proper remained determined to stop the withdrawal, by force if necessary. Many of them sewed yellow Stars of David to their clothing to indicate that the government was behaving like the Nazis in sealing off Yamit.

Meanwhile, more than 100 miles away in northern Israel, troops continued to man roadblocks around four Druze villages on the Golan Heights where the residents are in the third week of a general strike to protest Israel's annexation of the region. The army said that the villagers are free to move inside the towns but cannot leave or enter them. The press is also banned from the region.

GEORGETOWN U. DENIES PLO PARTY

WASH. (WNS) -- Georgetown University has revoked permission for the Arab student organization there to hold a "cultural event" after it learned that it was to be an anniversary dinner for the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine, (DFLP), an organization that is part of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Wes Christenson, director of public relations for the Jesuit school, said the student group has been given permission for the cultural event and dinner to be held at the University's Hall of Nations. But the school administration received complaints from alumni that they had received a flyer inviting them to celebrate the anniversary of the DFLP. The DFLP has a seat on the PLO Executive Committee.
