 "One Man Plus The Truth Constitutes A Majority"

I apologize. My main man, Jerry (Tark the Shark) turned into a jellyfish. I'm hot and I must tell you why.

Simply, the National Invitation Tournament Committee gave him a free ticket to New York to play in the final four at Madison Square Garden and he said "No thank you," right out there on the court.

The Rebels were fortunate to host the opening round against a fine Murray State team from the Ohio Valley conference. After trouncing them, the NIT committee decided to send the Green Wave of Tulane University to Vegas for the second round and if Vegas wins, they were to host the third round at home. Next stop, New York City, the Big Apple.

This writer and his avid fan wife, Rita, made airline reservations, hotel accommodations and were even set to see a Broadway play. We were going back home to root for our Runnin' Rebels at the "Big House," Madison Square Garden.

Well, Jerry had it in the palm of his hand and what did he do? He blew it, that's what!

Tark had a 10 - point lead against Tulane. Their front line was in foul trouble. They were whacked out, defeated and just trying to keep their dignity from being blown out on the court.

And what does our Shark do? Go right to them and in for the kill -- NO -- he spreads the court with 10-minutes to go, gives Tulane a second wind, protects their foul-plagued front line and plays right into their hands so they go on to defeat our team 56 - 51.

The opposing coach told a friend of mine they felt they didn't have a Chinaman's chance, until they saw Jerry "take the air out of the ball." Then they knew they'd win it.

Why would my man, Jerry Tarkanian, who brought run-and-gun, full - court pressure defense to Vegas turn to the delay game time-in and time-again this season. The only logical explanation is perhaps the man suffers from temporary amnesia and can't recall the style of play that made Vegans, like myself, worship him.

I've seen them all; from the master, John Wooden to Mr. Emotion, Al McGuire. From the tactician Dean Smith to Mr. Discipline himself, Coach Bobby Knight of Indiana. No one could do it better than my Jerry Tarkanian. He came to play the game like it was meant to be played. He was the greatest!

Now, unless he reverts back to the style of play that we are used to, for the whole 40 minutes, I won't defend him again.

Here in Vegas we are used to a "Go-For-Broke" attitude. Break the Bank, Shoot for the Moon, and Go-Get-em. We don't like a guy who won't double-down his 11 against the dealer's 6, who won't make a pass-line bet without a hedge bet on any craps. We want a coach who plays the game like it was meant to be played. Out of fight, not out of fear. Out of spunk - not out of caution. Throw caution to the wind.

Play men who will give 110 per cent for the whole 40 minutes. Win or lose, go out fighting like a man. Don't give us Roberto Duran's "No Mas" in a championship fight. Say "We Shall Return" or "We have not yet begun to fight."

We need the Jerry Tarkanian of yesterday, who might use the spread court game as a last resort, not AS A WAY OF LIFE.

We need the Jerry Tarkanian of old who plays out of fight, not fright. We want Tark the Shark back, not Jerry the Jellyfish. Give us a break, a fast break.

ROME (WNS) -- Three Italian minesweepers which will patrol the Straits of Tiran as part of the Sinai peacekeeping force were sent to La Spezia to be adapted for their duties. The vessels will each carry 25 sailors and 15 liaison men for shore missions, all of them volunteers. To symbolize the peaceful character of their mission, the 405 foot craft will be painted white instead of the Navy gray.

Taking Aim in St. Paul

The city of St. Paul, Minn., disturbed by the continued rise in vandalism and desecration of property directed against its minority community, has just passed what is described by one leading official of the Jewish community as a "landmark law." The bill, called the "Religious, Racial and Ethnic Acts of Malice Law," makes it a misdemeanor to place a "symbol of hate" on both private and public property. The hearings prior to the unanimous City Council approval of the measure displayed the diverse community support for the bill. The Council not only heard from representatives of the Jewish community, but leaders of the Hispanic, Black, Indian and Vietnamese community also expressed their support.

On the more technical side, the bill is designed to fill a gap in the existing laws. Councilman Leonard Levine, who introduced the measure, explained that under the existing laws, a person may not be convicted of vandalism if, for example, the daubing on a house of a swastika or the letters KKK with a substance which is removed without damage to the house.

More significant, the measure makes it a misdemeanor to deface property even if no damage was done - if that person placed a symbol or object "and knows or has reasonable grounds to know it will arouse anger, alarm, or resentment in others on the basis of race, color, creed or religion," Levine explained.

In his formal statement of introduction of the bill, Levine said it was designed to make it a misdemeanor "for any person to intentionally or in reckless disregard put another person in fear of bodily harm or death by placing on public or private property a symbol, object, appellation, characterization, graffiti, a burning cross or Nazi swastika."

The City Council, backed by the large support of its community constituency, demonstrated a strong sense of solidarity in enacting this bill. And while the law may be challenged on the grounds that it conflicts with the constitutional rights of free speech, it is yet another signal from a community in this country that freedom of speech cannot be used as a basis to defend the burning of a cross on a person's front lawn.

"Law of Sea" Treaty

UNITED NATIONS (WUP) -- A treaty on the Law of the Sea, which has been debated over pro and con periodically for almost two decades and which may be adopted finally by the end of April this year, should prove of great value to Israel, according to Ambassador Shabtai Rosenne, veteran Israeli diplomat who has represented the Jewish State since the discussions on the treaty began as far back as the mid-1950s.

During an exclusive interview with this writer in our WUP Bureau here on the third floor Secretariat edifice -- the singular Israeli-Jewish nice within this compound -- the amiable Israeli expert on the Law of the Sea indicated to what great an extent the treaty, once implemented, would also benefit Israel as well as other states on the east Mediterranean coastline. Indeed, the world as a whole.

The Jewish State's main interest in the treaty "is to preserve freedom of navigation and freedom of overflight because," he added, "all our exports go by sea and by air..."

The interview with diplomat Rosenne took place on a very important day here at the UN. The Third UN Conference on the Law of the Sea opened its 11th session in the hope that the U.S. and several other Western states -- France, West Germany, and Britain -- who had drafted an independent 'mini-treaty' -- would find a compromise and accept the majority view. Also, it was the day in which the UN announced the name of Ambassador Rosenne as one of six candidates to fill a vacant seat in the prestigious International Court of Justice. The other five candidates are Abdel Meguid of Egypt; M. Benjaudi, Algeria; Leon - Luis Bois-sier - Palun, Benin; K. H. Maghur, Libya; E. Razafindralambo, Madagascar.

As to the position of the West, especially the U.S., doubt lingers whether an agreement can be reached in finalizing the treaty. The consensus here is that the majority will adopt
