ting, Begin's government attempted to blame the present unrest on the West Bank to previous Labor governments because they permitted free municipal elections there in 1976.

Begin denounced slogans heard at the Peace Now Rally, such as "The Golan is Syrian" and "Down with the Occupation." He said the slogan about the Golan was in effect "erasing, trampling and ignoring a law, the Golan annexation bill of last February 14, which was supported by many Laborites.

But a spokesman for the Peace Now movement said Begin owned an answer to the thousands who turned out to protest his government's policies in the occupied territories. Denouncing one slogan or another, as Begin did, was no explanation for the serious deterioration of the situation on the West Bank.

To place the blame for the present unrest in the West Bank on the soldiers of previous Labor party governments has been a frequent theme as of late and has been picked up by other Likud spokespeople. Menachem Milson, head of the civil administration on the West Bank held a press conference March 26 at which he said that Israel's struggle against the PLO has reached a "very crucial stage." He claimed that the 1976 elections were held under PLO "terror and intimidation" and as a result, 10 out of 25 West Bank municipalities were controlled by PLO supporters. When reminded by reporters that Israel always prided itself that the 1976 elections were free, Milson retorted that they were free from Israeli pressures but not from PLO pressures and that he himself never considered them free elections.

AUSTRIANS REPORT ABOUT MIDEAST

VIENNA (WNS) --- The Austrian government's foreign policy report for 1981 said that the tradition of friendly relations with the Arab world and Israel had continued throughout 1981. It acknowledged that there had been differences in opinions between Austria and Israel concerning the question of the Palestinians and the ways and means towards a peaceful solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict. The report was presented to the press by Foreign Minister Willipad Pahr, also said that the relations with the Palestine Liberation Organization, which Austria recognizes as the legitimate representative of the Palestinians, had not undergone any change. On the other hand, this does not mean that Austria has approved everything the PLO or its representatives have done or said, the report added.
