who is a member of his campaign team. His wife, Anne, long active in Reno civic affairs, died last year. Santor served four years with the Marines, saw combat in Korea and came home with the rank of sergeant and two Purple Hearts. His unit received a presidential citation.

In commenting on his reasons for running for State Treasurer, Santor noted, "These are hard and difficult times in Nevada. When the treasurer invests available funds, Nevada-oriented projects which help provide jobs and improve the state's economic base must be strongly considered. In this job, I could contribute to Nevada's overall financial growth."

Santor said he sees advantages to being an enthusiastic newcomer to an elective office: "I will go in with new ideas and plans to continue the improvements made over the past three and a half years by Stan Colton. I will contact financial institutions, business leaders and civic leaders for additional proposals.

"With my lifelong involvement in business, and the tough times of meeting a payroll, I believe I will bring a hard-working perspective to the job of State Treasurer that will benefit all Nevadans."
