said Direct Action was being banned under a 1936 law prohibiting private militias. The Direct Action group, which police estimate has about 100 members, is said to have links to the PLO, the Red Army Faction in West Germany and the Red Brigade in Italy. The main sig-nificance of the dissolution order is that membership in or any activity connected with the group will be considered an offense, making it easier for police to apprehend suspected members.

At the same time, police in Paris launched a major manhunt for the leader of Direct Action after he told a newspaper group had that the carried out a number of anti - Semitic atcity. tacks in the The leader was iden-tified as Jean-Marc Rouillan. Is the American Jewish community guilty of "the moral crime of silence" regarding Israel's military action in Lebanon?

That question has haunted large segments of American Jewry, especially many of its religious and communal leaders. Perhaps the clearest statement of the Jewish moral dilemma over Lebanon was expressed by Albert Vorspan, vice - president of the Reform Union of American Hebrew Congregations, and director of its Commission on Social Action of Reform Judaism.

Writing in a recent Op-Ed column of the New York Times, Vorspan identifies himself as a deeply committed Zionist who applauded Prime Minister Begin's genuine sacrifice for peace with Egypt. He also said that Israel's moving across the border to smash the PLO, a lawless, bloody international Manson gang was not only justified but necessary. But Israel's army pushing into Beirut has cost heavily in death and suffering. While many Jewish leaders have spoken out against the needless death of civilians, most have not. Why?

Vorspan says that most Jews have remained silent because of the double standards inflicted on Israel. Who judges Iran and Iraq where 80,000 troops have been killed and some 200,000 wounded, more people decimated than were lost in the entire invasion of Lebanon?

It is not easy, Vorspan adds, to dump on Israel in a world in which Arab rejectionism, United Nations lynch mobs, Western lust for Petrodollars, Soviet malevolence, and constant thrashing by the media represent profound dangers to Israel's long - range survival. When the world deals fairly with Israel, American Jews will be freer to go public in their self - criticism.
