

33 JEWS ELECTED

Millicent Fenwick (R. N.J.). The 57-year-old Lautenberg is honorary national chairman of United Jewish Appeal and is probably the first national Jewish leader to be elected to the Senate. The 54-year-old Hecht also has close ties to the Jewish community. The operator of clothing stores in Las Vegas, he had served in the Nevada State Senate from 1966 - 1974 and is considered close to his new Republican colleague from Nevada, Sen. Paul Laxalt.

The two newcomers along with Metzenbaum and Zorinsky join four other Jews in the Senate, now evenly divided between four Republicans and four Democrats. The others are Sens. Rudy Boschwitz (R. Minn.) and Carl Levin (D. Mich.) whose terms expire in 1984, and Arlen Specter (R. Pa.) and Warren Rudman (R. N.H.).

Four other Jews, all Democrats, ran for the Senate, two of them losing in very close elections. Missouri State Senator Harriet Woods came from behind but was unable to defeat her Republican opponent Sen. John Danforth to become the first Jewish woman to serve in the Senate. In Rhode Island, former State Attorney General Julius Michaelson was also defeated in a close race with Republican Sen. John Chafee. Two other candidates were defeated as expected, Dr. Cyril Wecht by Sen. John Heinz in Pennsylvania, and David Levinson lost to Sen. William Roth in Delaware.

All seven newcomers elected to the House are Democrats. However, the five Republican Jewish incumbents in the House were re-elected. There are now two Jewish women in the House with the election of Democrat Barbara Boxer, a San Francisco county commissioner. The other woman is also a Californian, Rep. Bobbi Fiedler, a Republican from the Los Angeles area who won her second term. Two other Jewish women, both Democrats were defeated. They are Lyn Cutler, vice chair of the national Democratic Party in Iowa and Beth Bland, a mayor in the state of Washington. In addition to Erdreich, Siskis, Levin and Boxer, the other Jewish newcomers are Howard Berman and Mel Levine, both Democrats from California, and Larry Smith, a Democrat from Florida.

Meanwhile, most supporters of Israel in the Senate were re-elected. Among them were such stalwarts as Sens. Henry Jackson (D. Wash.), Daniel Moynihan (D. N.Y.), Paul Sarbanes (D. Md.) Edward Kennedy (D. Mass.) and Heinz and Danforth.

In the House, Rep. Clarence Long (D. Md.) chairman of the House Foreign Appropriations subcommittee and a leading supporter of Israel was re-elected. Another winner in a close race was Rep. Dante Fascell (D. Fla.), a close supporter of Israel on the House Foreign Affairs Committee.
