the most unique shopping complex in the country. The interior will be a replica of a European village, complete with cobblestone streets, trees, fountains, a town square, sixteen ethnic restaurants, Bob Taylor's Steak House, The Ancient Albatross seafood restaurant, Adrienne's Gourmet Restaurant, plus there will be a gourmet grocery, wine and liquor department and will house the largest fresh meat, fish and produce department in the State of Nevada.

While the Farmers Market has leased 100% of the retail space, there are two small areas that the developers held back. They are holding these areas open for a limited time, in the event there may be another unique or unusual retailer who would like to be associated with the country's premiere shopping complex. There will be 85 merchants in all. The Farmers Market will be infusing hundreds of new jobs into the sagging Las Vegas economy.

A.V.A. INVESTMENTS, INC., the developers, are confident that their Farmers Market project will not only revitalize the Commercial Center, but will be a mecca for the locals and tourists alike.

WASHINGTON SEEKS TO SPEED PROGRESS

made in the effort to gain the withdrawal of the foreign forces. An Administration official, briefing reporters here, said that when the two special U.S. envoys -- Philip Habib and Morris Draper -- return to the Middle East to continue the negotiations, which have been progressing slowly for some 11 weeks, they will go "back to a negotiating environment that is... positively altered" as a result of the talks in Washington.

Shamir, who had five separate sessions with Secretary of State George Shultz and met for 30 minutes with President Reagan indicated that whether or not progress was achieved would become apparent soon when the parties return to the negotiating table. He said "some new ideas have emerged" which he was taking back to Jerusalem "with the conviction that we are nearer" to a solution. Salem and Shamir met separately with Shultz.

Salem said the "people in the Middle East are tired of war. They are ready for a civilized existence, and there is a leadership in the Arab world that is now ready and determined to secure peace." Salem asserted that "if we succeed in having peace in Lebanon, I think that peace in the Middle East is possible in the not too distant future."

The negotiations have apparently been allowed over Israel's demands for security arrangements to protect Israel's northern border from future terrorist attacks and seeks an agreement with Lebanon on some sort of normalization.

Shamir emphasized that the major purpose of his visit to the U.S., which was extended by one-day for more consultations with the Administration, was to explain Israel's position to the Americans and to seek what he termed a coordinated policy between Israel and the U.S.

Meanwhile, there was little indication of what kind of agreement will be worked out in an effort to ensure the security of northern Israel and southern Lebanon. Reports of the proposals here suggest that the expansion of the U.S. Marines to southern Lebanon in conjunction with other troops in the multinational force currently in the Beirut area, would only be decided upon after the shape of the security arrangement is worked out.

The reports of the proposals being made by the U.S. include giving the Lebanese army responsibility for patrolling the areas near the Israeli border with Maj. Saad Haddad's Christian militia being absorbed into the regular Lebanese army. The MNF would expand outside of the Beirut area to prevent infiltration, principally from Syria, into south Lebanon. The Administration officials, in briefing reporters, suggested that the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) might be stationed near Palestinian refugee camps to give the residents there a feeling of security while the Lebanese army would have the actual responsibility for security.
