U.S. Admits Aiding Barbie Escape

Redeployment To Start Soon

TEL AVIV (WNS) — Chief of Staff Gen. Moshe Levy said here that the Israel Defense Force redeployment from the Shouf Mountains areas of Lebanon to its new lines along the Awali River north of Sidon would be effected "within a matter of days." He told a luncheon of the Foreign Press Association in Israel, that the move southwards would begin shortly and would be completed "in one phase, speedily." He added that the reason for a swift redeployment was not budgeting but security related.

Meanwhile, Defense Minister Moshe Arens visited the Beirut area and told a press conference of Beirut-based correspondents that the redeployment to the Awali, to be carried out and completed "within eight to 12 weeks," was part of the Israeli plans for a complete withdrawal from Lebanon. But the final withdrawal depended on the withdrawal of all other foreign troops from that country, Arens said.

Arens was quoted by Israel Radio as saying that Israel could not be responsible for what would happen in the Shouf area after the IDF withdraws from there. "We think it important that agreement is reached between the Druze, the Christians and the Lebanese government before we

From Germany After World War II

WASHINGTON (WNS) — The United States Government has apologized to France because U.S. army intelligence officers prevented Klaus Barbie, the wartime gestapo leader of Lyon, from being extradited to France 33 years ago by lying about his whereabouts and then helping him to flee from Germany to South America.

Allan Ryan Jr., a special assistant in the criminal division in the Department of Justice, said he urged the apology in submitting his report to Attorney General William French on the U.S. government's involvement in the Barbie case. He said the State Department presented a note of "regret" to the French Embassy.

The 216-page Ryan Report and more than 600 pages of supporting documents were made public at a press conference at the Justice Department. The 38-year-old Ryan was director of the Office of Special investigations, which investigates and prosecutes Nazi war criminals in the U.S., when he was asked to devote his full time to the Barbie case which he has done since March 15.

The study was made after allegations about U.S. complicity in Barbie's escape cropped up

"One Man Plus The Truth Constitutes A Majority"

Until We Meet Again

A Moving Story of Holocaust Survivors With Two Happy Endings

When Michael Korenblit and Kathleen Janger began writing the true Holocaust survival story of Michael's parents, the tale had only one happy ending -- the reunion and marriage of Meyer and Manya after two years of separation and internment in eleven concentration camps. Now their story, UNTIL WE MEET AGAIN (August 4, 1983; $16.95), will be published with a second miraculous ending -- the reunion, after 39 years, of Manya and her younger brother Chaim.

The reunion of brother and sister, who were each convinced that he or she was the sole survivor of the family, made world headlines and was the direct result of Michael Korenblit's commitment to chronicling his parents' story. Without his insistence on accuracy and detail, Manya never would have traveled to Israel and received the tantalizing clue that led her to her beloved younger brother.

After the deportation or slaughter of most of the 10,000 Jews of the city of Hrubieszow, Poland, Meyer Korenblit, his sweetheart Manya Nagelsztajn and her brother Chaim were among the few young people left to clean and sort the property of the decimated Jewish community under the supervision of Nazi guards and guns. Several months later Chaim was snatched in a round-up and sent off to a concentration camp. Meyer and Manya soon followed. After they were separated and Manya was transferred to Auschwitz, she had word of Chaim, "They took
