

Former Minister Of Labor Sentenced

JERUSALEM (WNS) — The former Minister of Labor, Social Welfare and Absorption, Aharon Abu Hatzeira, was sentenced by the Supreme Court to three months in prison. This was a more severe sentence than the Tel Aviv district court handed down in April, 1982. The court convicted him on charges of fraud, theft, and breach of public trust but suspended a four-and-a-half month jail term. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had been too lenient.

The charges against Abu-Hatzeira stemmed from his administration of a State-supported charitable fund established in the name of his late father, former Chief Rabbi of Morocco Yitzhak Abu-Hatzeira, when he was the Mayor of Ramle in 1976. The Supreme Court justices denounced Abu-Hatzeira's practice of transferring funds, while he was Welfare Minister, to public institutions.

After his conviction by the Tel Aviv district court, Abu-Hatzeira said he would not resign from his Knesset seat, as the head of the Tami faction which he formed in 1981 after defecting from the National Religious Party, pending the outcome of his appeal to the Supreme Court against his conviction.

By law, the Knesset cannot force him to give up his seat but the Knesset House Committee could suspend him for the period during which he serves his sentence. At the request of his defense attorney, Shlomo Tussiah-Cohen, implementation of the prison term will not begin until October 2.
