

ONLY in VEGAS

BULA from Fiji. That means hello or goodbye or love in many languages. Babe and Carl Lieb have just returned from the wild and woolies, Tahiti, Australia and New Zealand. A month is not enough. The people have to be the friendliest people in the world. They went to the Fairy Penguin Parade in Melbourne, the Opera House in Sydney, and the Tower in Canberra, which is the brand new capital of Australia, a planned city corresponding to Washington, D.C. They enjoyed a home stay in Rotorua, in New Zealand with a visit to a working sheep station, and saw the Leicesters, Dorsets and Merinos. Along the way, the Koala preserve was visited and hob nobbed with the kangaroos and wombats. Most delightful was a Maori Hangi dinner affair. They just can't say enough about "Down Under" except, it is the tops.

Harold "Hal" Miller died Saturday, January 28, 1984. Born in Los Angeles, California, Mr. Miller was 74 years old. He moved to Las Vegas with his family in 1959 to relocate his business; Miller Novelty Company. Harold Miller was co-owner with his son Steve of the Teenbeat Club, a teenage night club he operated on Paradise Road during the 1960's. Miller was known as a designer and manufacturer of Las Vegas souvenir items which he wholesaled to local gift shops and department stores. He will be succeeded by his son Steve at Miller Novelty Company. Miller is survived by his wife; Sally, sons; Michael and Stephen, and granddaughters; Michelle and Melanie.

A lucite clock donated by Irv Bronstein was won by Moishe Reuben. The most original ladies' costume of evening was Bella Hasselson who came as a cabbage patch doll, and the outstanding male costume was worn by Moishe Reuben who came dressed as a "member of a religious order." Len Hasselson was presented with a plaque for his fine leadership during the building fund campaign. Singing and dancing followed with music by Nate Someral.

Congratulations to pianist Ron Harris, eighth grader, who placed in the top six finalists at the Search for Talent Contest at the Reed Whipple Center. Ron will compete at the Charleston Arts Center next and then if successful on to California. Good luck Ron.
