Begin Said To Be Reviving Political Interests

JERUSALEM (WNS) — Former Premier Menachem Begin, who has lived in virtual seclusion since his surprise resignation more than a year ago, has begun to show interest in political developments and has had a number of meetings recently with several of his former colleagues.

According to Yediot Achronot, Begin met with former Finance Minister Yoram Aridar and with Minister of Commerce and Industry Ariel Sharon. His discussion with Sharon centered on the latter's $50 million libel suit against Time magazine, the newspaper reported.

Begin reportedly had a lengthy telephone conversation a few days ago with Deputy Premier Yitzhak Shamir who replaced him as the leader of Likud. Begin was said to have expressed great interest in the party's internal developments, particularly the touchy relations between its Herut and Liberal Party wings.

The newspaper quoted intimates of Begin as saying he spends most of his time reading and watching television and that he keeps up to date with current affairs. Yehiel Kadishai, Begin's long time personal aide, said recently that the former Premier would soon begin writing his memoirs.

But another associate of Begin was quoted to the effect that the former leader has no intention of returning to politics or of trying to exert his influence on the political scene.

I KNOW
WE SHOULD GO TO THE FUNERAL HOME

BUT, I NEVER KNOW WHAT TO SAY.

The fact is that nothing can be said to express adequately our loss or make the bereaved family feel better. But that doesn't mean that a visit and an expression of sympathy won't be helpful. Bereaved persons tell us that it's not the words that are helpful but that someone cared enough to go to the funeral home and express their sympathy in person. Sometimes just a hug or holding your friend's hand briefly is a good way to say "I care." When a friend loses a loved one go to the funeral home. Express your sympathy and offer your assistance. You'll be appreciated for caring.
