Rabin: Defense Cuts Mean Security Risk

TEL AVIV (WNS) — Israel is faced with a serious military dilemma, "painful cuts" in defense budget made mandatory by the country's severe economic situation and escalating terrorism in Lebanon, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin said. The budget cuts, Rabin said, would necessitate the dismissal of between 5,000 to 8,000 employees of the defense establishment, "both military and civilians." This means that Israel will be forced to take certain risks with security.

"We are faced at the same time with two seemingly contradictory problems — painful cuts in the budget and standing firmly against the most sophisticated and complicated terrorism in south Lebanon," he told a conference of Na'amat/Pioneer Women. The Defense Minister explained that the problem of terrorism in Lebanon is complicated by the fact that the country has been split and riven by internal ethnic strife for many years."

He described Lebanon as a country where internal terrorism between the various factions has become the most sophisticated terrorism anywhere in the Middle East, "without any connection with Israel and there is no chance of any change in the near future."

Rabin stressed that the Israel Defense Force has no better option than to withdraw from Lebanon because there is no chance of a stable government emerging in that country.
