

Who Really Won In Toronto?

The bizarre eight week trial of Ernst Zundel, a purveyor of the insane notion that the Holocaust was a myth, a ploy concocted by the Zionists to extort reparations from West Germany, has concluded with Zundel being found guilty by a 12-person jury in Toronto of deliberately publishing lies about the Holocaust.

While the jury said Zundel was guilty of willfully publishing false information likely to cause racial or social intolerance when he published "Did Six Million Really Die?" a lingering and surely to be long debated question persists: Who really won in Toronto?

According to Paul Lungen, who covered the trial for the Canadian Jewish News, the trial caused considerable pain and anguish in the Jewish community in Toronto. To obtain a conviction, the prosecuting attorney had to prove that the pamphlet, "Did Six Million Really Die," was false and to do so, he had to prove the Holocaust was an historical event.

Holocaust survivors took the stand, as did "expert witnesses" for the defense who explained their "revisionist" view of the Holocaust.

West Germans To Try Mengele, When Found

BONN (WNS) — The West German government has recently informed 12 countries where Nazi war criminal Josef Mengele has reportedly found refuge in the past few years that it intends to ask for his extradition to stand trial, if and when he is located.

Deputy Justice Minister Benno Erhard, speaking for the ruling Christian Democratic Union (CDU), reported that the U.S. has advised Bonn that the government of Paraguay is willing to cooperate, and would arrest Mengele if he is found in that country.

He also said that when Paraguayan President Alfredo Stroessner pays his official visit to Bonn shortly, Chancellor Helmut Kohl will raise the issue of Mengele during their talks. Paraguay is considered by most Nazi-hunters to have been Mengele's haven for many years.

Some of these witnesses for the defense contended that, for example, prisoners at Auschwitz, dined and danced to the sounds of the Auschwitz waltz, and that there were no gas chambers at Auschwitz.

Holocaust survivors, meanwhile, were forced to take the stand to recount to the jury their experiences some 40 years ago at the hands of the Nazis. Even though the survivors recounted stories that have become part of history, they were grilled unmercifully by the defense lawyers who questioned the accuracy of their memories and at times boldly stated they were lying.

After the verdict, Zundel claimed a moral victory. "I have won on both counts. It cost me forty thousand dollars in lost work. But I got one million dollars worth of publicity for my cause." His cause, of course, is the spreading of revisionist thought and racial and religious hate.

Others contend that Zundel was proved to be a liar, of being "a Nazi, a racist and a propagandist." The majority of Canadians, declared Sabina Citron, the woman who first laid the charges against Zundel, "will reject him and those that follow will follow him anyway."

No doubt, many, in fact, the majority of people must have looked on in shock at the charade that enveloped the Toronto court house. That Zundel was provided a forum to contest a fact of history was a disgrace and that his cohorts and Nazi friends were allowed to take a stand in the court of law and contend that the Holocaust did not exist was a sham.

People like Zundel will always be part of society; those who hate others for various reasons. But to allow him and members of Nazi hate groups a platform to air their views is something society and courts throughout the country should consider before bringing formal charges against them.
