

Network Of Holocaust Center Professionals Formed

Directors and heads of Holocaust centers and organizations meeting in Washington, D.C. have formed a network of institutions that provide ongoing services and programs on the Holocaust.

The network will focus on the common needs, problems and goals of professionals and leaders directing Holocaust centers.

The 28 participants representing 19 institutions from the United States and Canada elected a five-person steering committee: David Blumenfeld (New York City Holocaust Memorial Commission); Sarah Ducorsky (LIFE Center for Holocaust Studies - Long Island); Sue Kollinger (Memorial Center for Holocaust Studies - Dallas); Isaiah Kuperstein (Holocaust Center of Greater Pittsburgh); and Marcia Littell (Anne Frank Institute - Philadelphia).

The network plans to establish a central clearinghouse of information on such program areas as oral history; curriculum development; libraries; museums; community outreach, and professional training. The steering committee is planning a conference for heads of Holocaust centers that will focus on these and other program areas.

As a start to the work of the network, the United States Holocaust Memorial Council has published a "Directory of Holocaust Resource Centers, Institutions and Organizations in North America." It is available without charge to libraries and other interested institutions. Requests should be addressed to:
