Buying concert tickets at UNLV's Thomas and Mack Center is much easier now thanks to the new lottery-ticket system that replaces the old priority-ticket one, according to box office manager Roger Grant.
"With this new method, we'll still have people line up on the first day of ticket sales," he explains. "But now they will only be required to make one trip into the center when they purchase the more desirable floor seats."

Ticket buyers must still buy concert tickets early for best selections, but now they will stand a better chance of getting those popular floor seats, because the lottery-ticketing system means everyone has an equal chance. Fans must be present when their numbers are called, and Grant reminds them to bring cash, which helps speed up the ticket selling process.
