2,000-Year-Old Shipwreck Discovered In Sea Of Galilee

TEL AVIV (WNS) — The discovery of the well-preserved 2,000-year-old wreck of a ship which sank in the Sea of Galilee at about the time of Jesus has aroused intense interest among archaeologists, historians, religious quarters and tourism officials.

Historians tend to believe, on the basis of preliminary reports of the as yet unexamined wreckage, that the wooden vessel was probably part of the fleet of Roman-style warships used by Jewish zealots in a sea battle against the Romans -- a bloody battle described by Josephus in his "Wars of the Jews."

But tourist officials hope that the claim by religious circles if proved to be true -- that this was the fishing boat used by Jesus during his ministry -- or, if not the actual vessel, certainly one of the fishing boats that he himself saw. Such proof would give a great boost to local tourism, they say.

The wreck was discovered because of the receding shoreline of the lake, the level of which has been dropping because of lack of rain. It was found off the ancient Galilee town of Migdal (traditional home of Mary Magdalene) by two brothers from nearby Kibbutz Ginosar who have found ancient coins in the area during farming operations. It was while searching around in the muddy area that they came upon the wooden prow of the ship and called the attention of archeologists to their find.

SEATTLE (WNS) — Ten members of a radical neo-Nazi gang have been given stiff prison terms ranging between 40 and 100 years for following a bizarre plot to overthrow the government and establish an Aryan society.
