

Rich Little Visits
'Legends In Concert'
At The Imperial Palace

Impressionist Rich Little visits backstage with Susan Griffiths who portrays Marilyn Monroe in "Legends in Concert" at the Imperial Palace Hotel & Casino.

One of the world's foremost impressionists, Rich Little, came to see one of the greatest impersonator shows in the world, "Legends in Concert" at the Imperial Palace Hotel & Casino.

Nightly in the Imperial Theatre, cast members re-create live on stage legendary superstars. When Little goes on stage, he seldom uses any make-up to make him look like the characters he portrays through the use of vocal xeroxes. "Legends in Concert" cast members take the impressions a step further -- besides imitating the legendary superstars' voices, they naturally, even without make-up, look like the legendary star each persons portrays. Costumes are used to further enhance the illusion; therefore, while watching "Legends in Concert," you feel as though the legends truly live again!

The "Legends in Concert" cast did their job well of entertaining and portraying because when Little saw the show, he started a standing ovation and backstage after the show said, "They are fantastic impersonators. They become the 'real' people. 'Legends' is a great show and it has unbelievable special effects and energy."

Showtimes are 8 p.m. and 11 p.m. nightly (except Sundays).

Rabin Sees No Sign Of Syria-Israel Military Confrontation

TEL AVIV (WNS) — Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin told U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese, at a meeting at the Defense Ministry that there were no signs of a military confrontation between Israel and Syria.

Meese is in Israel on a week-long private visit, during which he has met with government leaders and lectured at Tel Aviv University.

United Nations observers have reported to U.N. headquarters in New York that the routine examination of both sides of the Israel-Syrian line in the Golan Heights unearthed no signs of any changes on the part of either side in the military dispositions along the disengagement line. Copies of the UNDOF (U.N. Disengagement Observers Force) report were sent to Jerusalem and Damascus. UNDOF headquarters stressed that the inspection was routine and had no connection with recent reports of increased tension or a buildup of forces.

The IDF corps commander Major General Amir Drori says that the security belt in southern Lebanon has proved its value, but any deployment of Syrian forces further southwards towards that zone would improve the Syrians capacity for both defense and offense.

In an interview with General Drori on Israel Radio, Drori said that deployment along a line closer to Israel's northern border can, of course, improve the capability of the Syrians as regards both offense and defense, including granting cover to terrorists who can follow in the wake of the Syrians into these areas and situate themselves close to the Syrians. Asked if he expected war in the near future the Field Commander said the IDF was ready for that eventuality as well.

Replying to a question whether the landing of Katyusha rockets in Galilee last week did not mean that the IDF would have to return to Lebanon in one way or another because security zone does not meet all the security needs, Drori replied: "Overall, the conception of the security of the northern border, including the existence of the security zone in Lebanon, is proving itself, and even to a much greater extent than most people expected. Naturally it does not guarantee absolutely that no incident of any sort will take place, including the firing of Katyushas, as happened lately. If this situation changes dramatically, which is by all means possible, then additional steps will have to be taken in order to ensure quiet on the northern border," Drori said.
