Reagan Meets With King Hussein

WASHINGTON (WNS) — President Reagan and King Hussein of Jordan agreed that unless there was progress in the Middle East toward peace the region could once again "drift" toward war.

But a senior Administration official, briefing reporters on the hour-long White House meeting indicated the situation was still as stalled as it has been since February when Hussein broke off efforts to work out a negotiating stance with the PLO.

Hussein, who last met with Reagan in September was in the United States to attend the high school graduation of his twin daughters and to get a physical checkup at a Cleveland hospital. After his meeting with Reagan, he had lunch with Vice President George Bush and then met with Secretary of State George Shultz, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and other senior U.S. officials.

The Administration

official said both Reagan and Hussein agreed on the importance of the U.S. actively participating in the peace process. "The United States was the key to any progress toward peace," Hussein was quoted as saying. There was no discussion of a possible trip to the Mideast by Shultz, the official said. He noted that Shultz has made it clear that he will only go if his presence will help bring about a successful move toward peace.

The U.S. is also "not laying any plans at this moment," the official said. He said the Administration would study some suggestions made by Hussein although he would not reveal what they were.

But, the official stressed, "if we ever get negotiations going," the U.S. position is still as outlined by Reagan in his September 1, 1982 peace initiative.
