TEL AVIV (WNS) — Police announced the arrests of three members of a "terrorist squad" responsible for the grenade attack on Israeli soldiers and their families in the Old City, in which one man was killed and 69 soldiers and civilians were wounded.

The suspects were described as members of an extremist group known as the Islamic Jihad (Holy War), all in their 20s. Further identification was withheld by court order. The Nobel Assembly of the Karolinska Institute in Stockholm also awarded the Nobel Prize in Physiology and Medicine to Dr. Rita Levi-Montalcini, who holds dual American and Italian citizenship and Dr. Stanley Cohen, an American. Cohen, a biochemist, and Levi-Montalcini, a developmental biologist "Opened new fields of widespread importance to basic science," the Nobel Assembly in Stockholm announced. "As a direct consequence, we may increase our understanding of many disease states such as developmental malformations, degenerative changes in senile dementia, delayed wound healing and tumor diseases," the announcement said.

Levi-Montalcini, 77, is a senior scientist at the Institute of Cell Biology in Rome, and Cohen, 63, is a professor of biochemistry at Vanderbilt University School of Medicine in Nashville, Tenn. Together at Washington University in St. Louis in the 1950's, the two worked under a renowned American biologist, Viktor Hamburger, and conducted significant basic research on cancer, brain disorders, nervous disorders and birth defects.

Last month, they shared the highest American honor in biomedical research, the Albert Lasker Basic Medical Research Award for 1986. This month, the two share the approximately $290,000 Nobel cash prize.

Levi-Montalcini grew up in Turin, Italy, and received her medical degree in the university there. She worked in the University of Turin until 1939 when the fascist government of Benito Mussolini prevented her from working in the university or practicing medicine. She continued her cell research in her bedroom with a makeshift laboratory until the Nazi occupation of Italy drove her and her family underground. The
