Demjanjuk Trial Set For January 19

TEL AVIV (WNS) — The trial of John Demjanjuk, alleged to have been the notorious Treblinka death camp guard known as "Ivan the Terrible," will open in Jerusalem on January 19. The date was set at a meeting between the panel of judges who will hear the case, the prosecution and the defense.

A request for a three-month postponement by Demjanjuk's American attorney, Mark O'Connor, was rejected by Justice Don Levin, President of the court.

Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk, 66, is the first suspected Nazi war criminal extradited to Israel for trial. The former resident of Cleveland, Ohio, was brought to Israel earlier this year.

Meanwhile, a remark by former Supreme Court Justice Haim Cohen that if he were Attorney General he would recommend that suspected Nazi war criminal John Demjanjuk should not be brought to trial, raised a storm of protest in Israel, especially from concentration camp survivors and children of Nazi victims.

Cohen, who is retired from the bench and a former Attorney General, also said on a television interview that if he were still a practicing lawyer, he would be prepared to assist in Demjanjuk's defense. He said that while he upholds in principle the right and duty to bring Nazi war criminals to trial for their act, he believes that after more than 40 years it is difficult to provide accurate eye-witness identification of a suspect.

The Association of Children of Nazi Victims charged that Cohen's remarks lent legitimacy to those who want to forgive the Nazis for their crimes. Association president Edna Steinberg suggested that they would only encourage neo-Nazis throughout the world.

We are pleased to announce the opening of the
