

Our Las Vegas is a home town place

Maybe you've heard the song I've been using in my campaign for mayor, "Our Las Vegas was built on pride." The lyrics continue, "And what we've got deep down inside."

I believe that with all my heart. I've lived in Las Vegas for the better part of two decades. My children, Nevada and Summer, were born and raised here. "Our Las Vegas is a hometown place," the song goes, "A kid whose grin is bigger than his face."

But our Las Vegas also faces some very serious problems.

Our senior citizens need and deserve better attention and more support. We're threatened by a flood of drugs. We're confronted by a crisis in crime.

We can't just hope that these problems will go away, or trust the old political methods to solve them. We need bold new ideas, a fresh new surge of dedication and above all, we have to work together. "Standing with the neighbors who will do us proud," says the song.

If Las Vegas elects me mayor, I'll do my best to do it proud. Not just with my business skills and experience, but with my abiding faith in the great city we already are — and in the greater city we can surely become.

Las Vegas really is a hometown place.

That's why, as the song says, it's "Our Las Vegas."
