Waldheim Knew Of British Executed, But Says He Has A 'Clean Conscience'

LONDON (JTA) — President Kurt Waldheim of Austria insisted that he has "a clean conscience" with respect to the interrogation of six captured British commandos in Greece in 1944, who were later executed by the Nazis.

He admitted on a British television interview that he knew of the incident and did nothing about it, but denied he was personally involved.

"I have not done anything wrong. I was sharing the fate of hundreds of thousands of Austrians who were drafted into the German army," declared the former United Nations secretary general, who served as a Wehrmacht counterintelligence officer in the Balkans during World War II.

A new inquiry into the wartime deaths of the six commandos was ordered last month by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, following allegations that Waldheim was involved in their fate. A similar inquiry in 1986 found no link with Austria's chief of state.

The fresh inquiry was demanded by Robert Rhodes James, a Conservative Party member of Parliament from Cambridge who worked for Waldheim at the United Nations. Dissatisfaction with the earlier probe grew after disclosure that three Foreign Office files on one of the commandos was destroyed 10 years ago, as part of routine "shredding."

Rhodes James commented after the interview with Waldheim that he did not believe the disclaimer. He said the interview was

"evasive smokescreen stuff, lies and whoppers."

Waldheim claimed he came from a family persecuted by the
