

Reunion In Las Vegas

Half a century ago Liesel Strauss and Lottie Wertheim were friends living in Germany. With the coming of the Nazis Liesel and Lottie's families fled to Luxembourg. In 1938 Liesel went to Cleveland, Ohio. Lottie went to Israel two years later. They were reunited for the first time in 50 years in, of all places, Las Vegas, Nevada.

While Liesel was in Cleveland, she married her

The first Ronnie Greenblatt Dance Scholarship was recently awarded to UNLV student Bonnie Henchal, a 21-year-old junior majoring in dance.

Henchal, a member of the University Dance Theatre, intends to become a children's creative dance teacher.

The $500 scholarship will be awarded annually to a UNLV student majoring in dance with an emphasis in both modern and children's creative dance.

The scholarship is being awarded by Greenblatt's children, Susan Knoll Smith and Richard Knoll, in her honor.

Greenblatt was a long-time Las Vegas resident who owned a local dance studio devoted to the modern dance techniques of Martha Graham. She also formed a professional modern dance company in Las Vegas.

childhood sweetheart, Berndt Kahn, who had also left Germany to escape the Nazis. Lottie married Erich Goldschmidt who had fled Germany to Israel. The two have kept their friendship alive by corresponding through the years. Liesel found out that Lottie would be making a trip to the states and that they would be able to see each other again. Liesel traveled West to see her sons and to meet Lottie.

Their meeting was terrific. The years melted away — conversation was endless — it was like they were in the middle of a 50 year old conversation — and it just continued where it had left off.

Lottie is a widow. Liesel remarried after her husband's death. She and her husband, Joe Sullivan, have retired to Asheville, North Carolina.

Professor Yair Sprinzak, 66, a chemist at Tel Aviv University and at the Weizmann Institute of Science, is no. 2 man of Gen. Rehavam Zeevi's new Moledet party, which won two Knesset seats.

Moledet's campaign called for the "transfer" — meaning expulsion — of Arabs from the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Sprinzak, whose father, Yosef, was speaker of the first Knesset and a prominent member of Mapai, forerunner of the Labor Party, insists Moledet's philosophy is not so distant from the party of David Ben-Gurion.

"Many members of Mapai believed in transfer," according to Sprinzak.

Two of the three Knesset seats won by Mapam, the leftist United Workers Party of Israel, will be occupied by newcomers.

They are Chaim Oron, 48, secretary of the National Kibbutz Movement for the past eight years, and Fares Hasein, 52, the only newly elected Arab member of the Knesset.

Oron, a member of Kibbutz Lahav, is a leader of Peace Now. Hasein is editor of New Outlook magazine and chairman of the Committee Against Racism and for Coexistence, based in Western Galilee. He is headmaster of a school in Acre.

One of the two Knesset seats won by the Center-Shinui Movement will be occupied by a newcomer. He is Avraham Fosmintir.

There are several newcomers in the Knesset delegations of the two largest parties, Likud and Labor.
